Mitch Anderson, an animal science techinician, makes and markets "Anderson's BBQ Sauce." He made the sauce, based on his grandmother's recipe, when his wife ran out of a store-bought brand one night in 1987. The sauce can be bought in gift packets ranging in price from $6-8. He sold 500 jars between April and September 1993.

K-State tech produces, markets BBQ sauce

TERRY SCRUTON
Collegian

Kansas has a new barbecue-sauce king.

Mitch Anderson, an animal science technician at K-State, makes and markets his own self-titled brand of barbecue sauce. "Anderson's BBQ Sauce" has sold out of stores in Manhattan and Junction City.

Anderson said he started making the sauce one night in 1987 when his wife ran out of the store-bought brand. The sauce came from a recipe his grandmother, Bessie Holland, used. But Anderson added a few of his own ingredients.

"I give most of the credit to her," Anderson said. "She's the backbone of the whole idea. She cracked up laughing when she first heard about it."

Anderson began selling the sauce at church bazaars, using old ketchup and mustard jars as containers.

Response to the sauce was tremendous, and with encouragement from friends and family, Anderson set out to market his sauce.

He soon learned he had a long road ahead of him.

"I was very ignorant of the regulations back then," he said.

With great patience, and help from groups such as the Marketing Division of the Kansas Department of Agriculture, the Kansas Value Added Center and the KSU Small Business Development Center, Anderson persevered.

His biggest problem came from the U.S. Food and Drug Administration, which he said he would like to warn people about.

"It took about four to six months for them to get everything going," he said.

Between April and September of 1993, Anderson sold 500 jars of his sauce, and he continues to make more. He now works on the sauce mainly at the 4-H Center in Junction City.

"It's something we can do as a family."
ANNETTE ANDERSON

Anderson's family is thrilled with his success.

"I'm behind him 100 percent," his wife, Annette, said. "I love the sauce. I taste it for him and help him put it in jars."

Annette said their three teen-age daughters are also happy about their father's success.

"We let the kids get involved when it doesn't interfere with school," she said.

"It's something we can do together as a family."

Annette said she helps put together baskets of various Land of Kansas items to sell with the sauce. Items in the basket include beef sticks, cheese sticks, candies, fruit and, of course, the sauce.

"They make great Christmas gifts," Anderson said.

Anderson also sells a cajun-style sauce, and he plans to make sea-food, Mex-ican and Italian sty-les in the future. His dreams, however, do not stop there.

"I'd like to open up a barbecue restaurant in the area," he said.

Anderson has some advice he would like to offer anyone starting out with a new product or invention.

"Don't quit," he said. "Keep going, and smile once in a while."

That philosophy is printed on every label of the sauce. The letters "ATMO" appear on every jar.

"When people ask me how I'm doing," Anderson said, "I tell them I'm Absolutely, Tremendously and Marvelously Outstanding."

American Cancer Society to help people kick habit with 'Smokeout'

SUSAN HATTEBERG
Collegian

Manhattan will be helping smokers kick the habit today as part of the 17th-annual Great American Smokeout.

The American Cancer Society-sponsored smokeout is a national campaign to help reduce the number of smokers in the United States, said Carol Cramer, director of cancer control at the American Cancer Society in Topeka.

"In the United States there is an estimated 46 million smokers and 44 million former smokers," Cramer said.

Riley County Health Department will be helping smokers quit in Manhattan.

An 8-foot cake in the shape of a cigarette will be at the mall between 4 and 7 p.m. today, Joan Smith, health department educator, said.

"Anyone who says they have given up smoking or throws away a pack of cigarettes will get a piece of cake," Smith said.

"I have a bucket set up to throw the cigarettes away in, so they can kick the habit before they kick the bucket."

There will also be a bulletin board listing all the businesses that support a smoke-free environment, Smith said.

Brochures and informa-tion on the hazards of smoking and how to give up smoking also will be available, Smith said.

Cramer said last year 10.8 million people participated in the smokeout.

"Thirty-three million did not smoke for 24 hours, and 1.5 million still had not smoked five days later," Cramer said.

This is the first year the health department has involved the Manhattan community.

"We've had small things we've done at the health department, but this is the first year something has been done community wide," Smith said.

Smith said health educators wanted to make people aware and there are things people can do to give up the smoking habit.

Future preventative measures should dominate crime bill

The new crime bill making its way through Congress may have positive aspects, but for the most part it is misguided legislation.

The bill calls for $20 billion to put 100,000 new police officers across the nation on the streets, build regional prisons for convicted violent criminals and puts a mandatory life sentence on three-time losers.

The new obsession with Congress to combat the violent-crime epidemic is completely understandable. Violence in America is at an all-time high, while senators and representatives need only look out their Washington office windows to see the crime capital of the world spread before them.

They are tired of the angry letters and phone calls from constituents who are fed up with not feeling safe in their homes anymore.

But the emphasis of the bill is in the wrong place.

Experience and logic demand that the money would best be spent on preventing people from growing up to be violent criminals, rather than on more police and prisons.

We do know that the majority of people aren't born criminals. They are made that way through years of systematic abuse and neglect. Our current ideology is to try and fix the problem after the mold has been set. We need to fix our violent problems by finding an all new mold.

Are there really enough child and family counselors with jurisdiction to make a difference? Are there enough social workers to handle the monstrous case loads? And how many people may have been swerved from the path of crime had they been dealt with properly the first time they broke a law?

Tough questions that are getting band-aid treatment by the crime bill. Yes, the need for more police officers and prisons is all too relevant, but it needs to go farther than that.

We need to put our resources into stopping our young people today from becoming the criminals of tomorrow.

TOLES

Sometimes, hunting means finding things

My friends are laughing about the Lipplemans.

There are three Lippleman boys, and they are named after cash crops: Milo, Wheat and Rye. The Lipplemans have a sister, whose name is Stephanie. Someone with a lisp told us about the Lipplemans in a bar last night.

We are hunting, which is a little like walking. I do not go often; twice in college for quail and pheasant, a dozen times as a grade schooler with Father for prairie chicken. Always, always, as a boy, we would go to the Kiwanis Club for a pancake feed afterward. There are no pancakes today.

There is snow, however. Three inches or so. It is Sunday, and I am in a cornfield near Oberlin, 45 miles south of McCook, Neb., 12 miles north of Hoxie. The corn is yellow and brittle and sometimes whacks me in the face, and snow goes down the neck of my coat. Sometimes I stumble over a snow-covered dirt clod. These boots weren't made for walking.

There are two songs in my head, playing concurrently.

The first is a bluegrass song called "Fox on the Run," which has a verse in it that goes "She walks through the corn," and that is all I can remember.

The second song is Kenny Rogers' "Coward of the County," which I heard on the only station the Mazda could receive on the trip back from the bar in Oberlin last night. It is one of those songs you will hear when you wake up in the morning and cannot get out of your head for the rest of the day, no matter how hard you try.

Saturday we walked through this same field, and the damned dog scared up the birds much too far ahead of us for to get a shot at them. Today, the dog is doing better.

But yesterday, there was a house in the distance. Today, the falling snow hides it from me.

DAVID EUGENE FRESE

The house was two stories with broken windows and tumbleweeds on the kitchen floor. While the others went ahead of me looking for the pheasants as the day began darkening, I squeaked the gate open.

The yard was overgrown with brush and weeds. So much so that I stepped on a dirty doll before I knew what it was.

Looking west through the house, I thought there was a light on, but it was simply the sun setting through the shattered picture window in what was the living room.

I could see the sun through the kitchen window, where someone, a mother maybe, had once peeled potatoes or glimpsed her husband coming in from chores in the middle of a January snowstorm from nowhere.

Maybe she stood there as the sound of her children playing was interrupted by the glottal gurgling of her son choking on a butterscotch candy. Or maybe she just stood there on summer days and prayed for the damned wind to stop blowing.

Once when I was driving a motorcycle on a country road near Alta Vista close to the middle of nowhere I saw a girl in a brown dress with long hair riding an antique bicycle. She said "hi" and so did I, but, after I passed her, I did not turn around to look if she was still there because I was sure she was a ghost.

But today there is snow. There is the sound of fluttering and shotguns and someone saying "shit." Then there is nothing.

Nothing except the sight of a pheasant running in front of me. It stops, pecks at the white ground, looks with its red-circled eye. It is 15 or 20 yards ahead of me but then it ducks back in the corn and the snow. Somehow the dog, perhaps on the scent of another bird, does not scare the rooster up.

I do not say anything to anyone, and I do not look for it, because ahead of me, through the snow, I can just barely make out the house, and there is no light inside.

Kids – and you thought you knew it all

Either you (or your parents) are spending thousands of dollars for tuition, books, room and board, Big Foot pizzas and enough beer to float Ross Perot's ears just to get an education, when the only question in life most of you really want answered is: "What makes the opposite sex tick?"

Yes, whether you realize it or not, most of you spend the majority of your time here at this fabulous institution of higher learning contemplating the opposite sex.

Well, let me tell you that are only nanoseconds away in The Great Scheme of Things from Marriage and Children; two institutions which, when combined in concentrated form, will turn even the most raging of hormone rivers into the "slowest ketchup in town." Quicker than you can say, "Honey, I missed my period," you will be married and then a parent. Then all of your questions about life, marriage, NAFTA and the opposite sex will be, beyond a shadow of a doubt, forever launched into the stratosphere, because the only thing on your mind will be: Kids.

Let me tell you about kids.

There are only two versions: The "long-haired screaming type" (which are usually girls, but not always) and the "short-haired screaming type" (which are usually boys, or sometimes cats that have been thrown into the washing machine "just to see the kitty take a bath").

My wife and I have four of the "short-haired screaming type," who sometimes act like the "long-haired screaming type" when listening to the current excuse for music or given sufficient amounts of sugar. The two eldest are of the "I-know-damn-near-everything" sub-species, which means they are almost ripe for harvest and ready to be thrown out of the house to work for a "I-know-damn-near-everything" living. The two youngest are not quite ripe yet, but may be thrown out of the house anyway if another cat is found in the washing machine.

I also know for certain that boys use doors much the way Native Americans used to use smoke signals.

First Signaler (hollering out the back door): Johnnie, ask your Mommy if I can come over and play at your house (SLAM).

Second Signaler: OK Timmy (SLAM) (then reappears): It's awight wif her, but we gotta be quiet —- Dad's twying to sleep (SLAM).

First Signaler (hollering even louder out the back door): THEN WE'LL BE REALLY QUIET! (SLAM).

Second Signaler: OK! (SLAM).

Then there are the "bathroom techniques" unique to boys and severely retarded cape buffalo. For instance, there is the "What's That On The Ceiling" technique, which lets fly a spray in every direction of the compass; or the "How Far Can We Pee" technique, which is generally in one direction and covers every square foot in between.

Then there is the "Let's Pee Like 50 Elephants" technique, which sends a tidal wave of water over the side of the toilet, out the door, and down the driveway. Or, last but certainly not least, the "Dueling Wee Pees" technique which has been known to throw mothers into a dead faint due to its hazardous nature.

BRAD SEABOURN

Even though I have no girls, I have to say that having all of your children as boys is definitely better. Knowing what I know about 16 year-old boys (and I speak from years of experience as a 16-year-old) there is no way I would have a daughter. And there is probably no way a daughter could stand to have me as a father.

Just the thought of some hormone-infested, pimple-face twerp knocking on my door to ask me if he could have wild, wanton, sex with my daughter (assuming of course he made it over the barbed wire, past the machine-gun nest and through the mine field) would drive me nuts.

Sixteen-year-old, hormone-infested, pimple-face twerp: Good evening, Mr. Seabourn,

Me: How long have you been trying to have sex with my daughter, you perverted little twerp?

Sixteen-year-old, hormone-infested, pimple-face twerp: But, but, Sir, we were only going to go to the church square dance and ice-cream social.

Me: That's what YOU say! Ha! I know what's on your mind. And how did you get over the barbed wire and past the machine gun and through the mine field anyway? Huh? Well, answer me, you perverted little twerp!

As you can see, marriage and children take your mind completely off the opposite sex and onto more important things such as..."Hey you guys! Stop that screaming! (SLAM) Is that cat in the washing machine again? (SLAM) All right ... which one of you peed on the ceiling? (SLAM).

Keep the pennies in your pockets and the oranges in the fridge

Editor,

Two times during the fantastic K-State football season and a couple of times during the K-State basketball season, I couldn't help but notice how belligerent and violent, and frankly downright stupid some of our fans can be. I'm sure that you're aware of the instances that I'm talking about; nevertheless, I'll reiterate them here.

I'm talking about the throwing of pennies at people at the basketball games and the "chucking" of oranges at the football games. And most importantly and more recently the removal of the goalposts from the football field after a couple of football games this season. This is a serious problem that needs to be addressed. K-State is a tragedy waiting to happen. The community should be aware of this and be moved to some sort of action so that we don't have a similar incident here as what recently occurred at the University of Wisconsin.

We should have pride in our teams. It is integral to their success; but, we as fans detract immensely from that success by such acts of stupidity. Let's all be more responsible fans in the future and support our teams in a positive, rather than a negative, way.

▶ THANK YOU

Thanks to the lady who made chemistry experience happen

Editor,

I am writing in response to an article in the Nov. 15 Collegian. The article, titled "Children enjoy wonders of chemistry at the mall," was well written, and I would like to thank you for the coverage of the event.

However, I would like to add a note to the article. One very important person involved was not mentioned. Earline Dikeman, laboratory coordinator for the Department of Chemistry, was responsible for organizing the groups that were represented during the day, both this year and last year. Without her hard work, patience and dedication, the event would not have been a success. As it was, everything went smoothly and a great time was had by all. Thank you, Earline.

Sig Ep article not a problem, but where's the positive aspect?

Editor,

This is in reference to the article published on the front page about the Sigma Alpha Epsilon going on probation. I don't have a problem with this article being in the paper. But why does it so happen that the first time there is an article about greeks, it is negative, and it is on the front page?

Yes, I am a member of a sorority here on campus. Because of this, I am offended by the way the Collegian portrays greeks.

Greek groups make up a minority of this campus. Yet, they are the majority involved in campus groups and activities. Also, fraternities and sororities raise a lot of money to go toward different charities throughout the state and country. So, why is it that none of these positive aspects of greeks ever gets a chance to be published?

Once again, I don't have a problem with the article that was published. I just wish the Collegian would consider putting in different articles about the positive ways greeks are involved.

Chicken scratch in Engineering Minority Center shows idiocy

Editor,

I was deeply disappointed when I heard of recent racially derogatory remarks written in the Minority Engineering Study Center located in the basement of Seaton Hall. I am disappointed that this type of attitude and behavior exists on this campus, however; sad but true, I am by no means surprised.

For those who insist on harboring hate and anger based on racial and ethnic background, be cautioned that your words and actions do nothing but expose your own ignorance and more importantly, your own self-induced insecurities.

Men of true character and honor do not rely on fear and terror as a means of intimidation, nor do they hide behind stereotypes or flawed ideologies. Instead, they search for truth and seek honest experiences that strengthen their veracity.

K-State point guard Anthony Beane strips the ball away from Sergei Totarovich during the Cats' 85-51 win against the Central Army Sports Club of Russia. Beane led the team with four assists and also added 12 points.

Cats cruise against Russian team

BRIAN ANDERSON
Collegian

K-State won its 11th-straight exhibition game against foreign teams, beating the Central Army Sports Club of Russia, 85-51, Wednesday night at Bramlage Coliseum.

Five players had double-figure scores for K-State. They were led by junior-college transfer Belvis Noland, who had a game-high 18 points.

Altman said Noland performed well in the game, even though he might not be a starter when the Cats open against Southern Mississippi on Nov. 28.

"I thought Belvis did some good things — the biggest thing was his nine rebounds," Altman said.

"The starting spot is still up for contention. This exhibition game factors into practice. Right now, Demond (Davis) is ahead of Belvis defensively. Both guys have worked hard in early practices."

Noland said he thought he didn't play as well as he would have liked.

"I didn't play defense," Noland said.

"My rebounding was better, but I didn't care about how much I scored. Defensively, I would like to hold my opponent to 12 points in a game."

Both teams traded baskets early in the game before K-State went on a 22-5 run late in the first half to gain a 46-26 advantage at halftime. Altman said his team had a sluggish start.

"I think we had seven turnovers in the first half, and five of them were in the first four minutes," he said.

"We were nervous, but Deryl (Cunningham) had a couple of hooks and got us going."

Ron Lucas, who had six of his 10 points in the first half, said the squad was nervous at the beginning of the game.

"We were rushing things a little bit in the first part of the half," Lucas said.

"But once we settled down, we got things worked out."

Other players who scored in double figures were Brian Henson, who had 15 points, Anthony Beane, who ended the game with 12 points and Cunningham, who made five of six field goals to finish with 11 points.

The only player from the Russian team to score more than 10 points was Andre Spridonov, who had 13 points.

Altman said his team struggled offensively, despite having five players in double-figures.

"I think it was evident that we weren't smooth on the offensive end," said Altman, whose Cats shot 47.8 percent from the field.

"We did some good things, but we've got a long way to go.

"Our practices have been inconsistent. The group, as a whole, has worked fairly hard, but we can't seem to put three or four good days in a row."

The K-State offense picked up the pace at the start of the second half as they went on a 12-0 run in the first three minutes to build their lead to 58-26. Later in the half, they went on an 11-4 run.

Altman said he was pleased with Davis's performance, although Davis didn't score as much because of foul trouble.

"Demond is a capable offensive scorer," Altman said.

"Tonight, he was a little off, but he did well defensively on his man."

Both Davis and Noland were able to start tonight because of the knee injury to Askia Jones. Altman said Jones is getting better.

"He's moving around well, and he says that it feels good," Altman said. "He's off of the crutches already."

Jones sat on the bench and didn't suit up for the game. He was able to walk onto the court when the team was being announced before the game.

"We're watching to see if the white blood cells stay at the normal level," Altman said. "The doctors were surprised that nothing happened."

K-State plays its final exhibition game Nov. 22, when they take on Fort Hood at Bramlage. The tip-off is scheduled for 7:30 p.m.

VOLLEYBALL

Wildcats outlasted by Jayhawks 3-2

JEREMY CRABTREE
Collegian

The K-State volleyball team came close to breaking its 16-match losing streak, but not close enough as the Wildcats lost to Kansas 3-2 last night in Ahearn Field House.

Despite the loss, which dropped the Cats' season record to 7-14, Coach Patti Hagemeyer said it was the best showing of the year.

"It was definitely the best match that we have played this season," Hagemeyer said.

The Cats took command of the match in the second and third games by winning 15-9 and 15-11. The Jayhawks then came back to win the next two games 15-6 and 15-9.

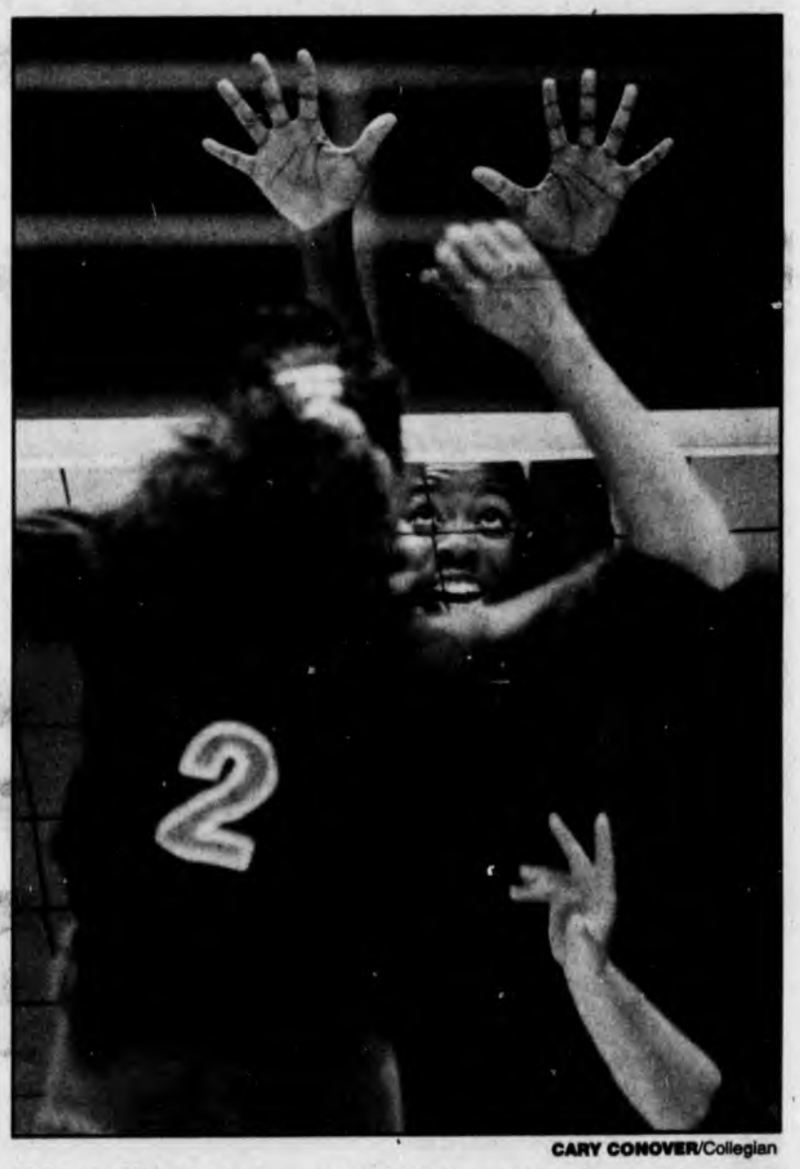
"It was a tough loss because we played so well," Hagemeyer said. "It was a typical match with Kansas. They are the kind of team that can catch you off-balance with their offensive attack."

After losing in the first game 16-14, the Cats jumped out to a 5-0 lead in the second game. The Cats continued to extend their lead until finally winning 15-9.

"The second game showed that we have the ability," Hagemeyer said. "All that we have to do now is corral that all, but we have only one more opportunity to do that against Iowa State on Saturday."

The Cats seemingly had control of the match, but Kansas jumped out to a 12-2 lead in the fourth game and cruised the rest of the way to even the match up at 2-2.

The Cats battled back to tie the fourth game 8-8, but KU went on 4-0 run to expand their lead to 12-8. The Cats ended up losing the game 15-9, and consequently, the match 3-2.



Outside hitter Stephanie Liester said the match was disappointing because it was the senior's last opportunity to win at home.

"I was really disappointed that we came that close," Liester said. "It really hurts that it was our last game here in Ahearn. We came so close."

Hagemeyer said she expects the Cats' effort against KU to carry over into their match on Saturday against the Cyclones.

"I wouldn't doubt if we come out here tomorrow and have a good practice," Hagemeyer said. "We will take what happened here tonight and carry into the match against Iowa State. We have a chance to knock them out of the Big Eight tournament, if we beat them."

In the seniors' last game at Ahearn, Liester had 20 kills, middle blocker Angie McKee had 16 kills, and setter Wendy Garrett recorded seven digs.

Ex-Chief likes Dolphins' passing game

ASSOCIATED PRESS

DAVIE, Fla. — The 39-year-old quarterback grins like a kid talking about a new toy. Steve DeBerg enjoys playing with the Miami Dolphins.

"It's no wonder that Dan Marino has been so successful here," he said Wednesday.

"This passing game is the best that I've been exposed to, and I'm a guy who has been around a long time."

Miami is the seventh stop in a 17-year career for DeBerg, the NFL's oldest player. He'll make his first start for the Dolphins on Sunday against the New England Patriots.

He becomes coach Don Shula's fourth quarterback this season. Marino and Scott Mitchell were sidelined by injuries; Doug Pederson, an emergency replacement in last Sunday's 19-14 victory at Philadelphia, remains No. 2 on the depth chart.

DeBerg, signed as a free agent last week, practiced with Miami's first team for the first time Wednesday.

"I can be very effective simply doing what I'm supposed to do, and that's the kind of quarterback I am," he said. "There are tremendous skilled athletes on this offense. It's by far the best offense I've played on."

With a supporting cast that includes Keith Jackson and Irving Fryar, DeBerg expects to do well once the ball is snapped.

The challenge, he said, will be remembering Miami's terminology for more than 200 plays and audibles in the huddle and at the line of scrimmage.

Most teams narrow their game plan each week to perhaps two dozen pass plays but not the Dolphins.

"Every play in the playbook is in the game plan," DeBerg said.

"I counted them last week. For first and second down there were 101 passes, and in the shotgun there were 86 passes. I mentioned it to Shula, and he said, 'Don't worry. We won't call them all during the game.'"

When Shula needed an emergency quarterback in 1965, he turned to running back Tom Matte, who wore a play list on his wristband and led the Baltimore Colts to victory. DeBerg probably won't try the same tactic.

"It would have to be a big wristband," Shula said.

"A better option for me is to call my own plays," DeBerg said. "I'll start drawing them up in the ground."

Miami will need to simplify things somewhat for DeBerg, and he's learning more quickly than another quarterback might. He wants to coach someday and considers a playbook interesting bedtime reading.

"Steve is one of the smarter guys I've ever met," said Dolphins tackle Ron Heller, who played with DeBerg in Tampa Bay.

"I'm amazed about how bright he is."

Tyson: all I know how to do is fight

NEW YORK (AP) — Former heavyweight champion Mike Tyson said he'll resume his boxing career when he leaves prison because, he said, "All I know how to do is fight."

"What else am I going to do, man, be a nuclear scientist?" he said in an interview published in Wednesday's New York Daily News.

"But it's not all I want," Tyson said. "I want a family. Fighting will give me the cash to live."

Tyson, who is serving a six-year term on a rape conviction, said he believes he could defeat current boxers, including champion Evander Holyfield.

"I'm envious of him," Tyson said. "He's got what I want ... he's classy ... he carries himself with dignity, but I can beat him."

Tyson also restated his contention he is innocent of raping a teen-age beauty contestant.

"People wanted me to cry in court. Cry and beg," he said. "Why should I? I didn't do anything."

PEOPLE & PROJECTS

■ Telefund director goes to Michigan

The annual Telefund hosted by the KSU Foundation is losing a staff member who usually directs the event.

Russ McMahon, former director of annual givings for the KSU Foundation, is leaving the foundation. He has accepted a position at a private school in Michigan.

"He accepted a position at the Interlocken Center for the Arts in a town in Michigan," said Gordon Dowell, director of publications for the KSU Foundation.

"It's like a high school but is focused more on the arts, especially music," Dowell said. "It is a private school with premiere programs and offers a prestige position for McMahon, "It says a lot about Russ and his abilities."

Other staff members are helping with the responsibilities of the Telefund now.

"We have new staff members taking on the responsibilities with the Telefund," Mark Moore, president of KSU Foundation, said.

The Telefund is a community-wide project that includes the KSU Foundation, the University and students.

"The program has gone through the roof since it started, and it will continue to succeed," Dowell said. "Alumni support along with support of the students have allowed the program to grow."

Campus secretaries have many roles

LORI ARMER
Collegian

Secretaries are visible employees in any operation. They are the greeters and the problem solvers who run many campus offices.

Debbie Caldwell has many roles as the administrative assistant to President Jon Wefald.

Her duties include scheduling, managing the office, directing people through proper channels and corresponding for Wefald.

On top of these responsibilities, Caldwell is also the secretary for the Landon Lecture Series.

"I send out invitations and tickets to the patrons and make all of the arrangements," she said.

Caldwell is a part of a team of two secretaries and one receptionist in Wefald's office. She must be able to handle many tasks and stresses that go along with the responsibilities of running an office, she said.

"Stress goes along with every job. It's how you handle it," she said.

"I feel I'm a good worker, and I enjoy the challenges of this position because they are what makes this office interesting."

She deals with students, University staff and University patrons. Caldwell said most secretaries are really assistants, which explains why they know so much about what goes on.

"We're important to the operation of the office. We have an excellent relationship with President Wefald, which is important," Caldwell said.

Aside from good working relationships, Caldwell said there are many positive things about her job, but she enjoys the atmosphere the most.

"I like the fact that a lot of different people come through this office. You meet people that you might not otherwise meet," Caldwell said.

Beth Kemp, Office Assistant IV of Business Administration Student Services, said she, like Caldwell, enjoys challenges of the office. She also said she likes being part of a team.

"It takes a team effort to do anything. You have to do what you have to keep it all going," she said.

"I enjoy my job. Once you find something you like, you want to stay. I knew I wanted this job once I interviewed for it."

She has worked for the College of Business Administration for four years and worked previously for four years at the College of Education.

Kemp's main responsibilities include residing as the office manager of student services, which means that she presides over three students and oversees the filing. Kemp also handles respective visits, correspondence, reports and typing.

In addition to these duties, Kemp is also the secretary to the assistant dean of the College of Business Administration.

She does not personally greet students, as receptionists and student workers do, but she is there to back them up when needed.

Kemp also has a role in pre-enrollment, which she said sometimes requires Saturday overtime.

"We have a good pre-enrollment system, and it works, so there isn't a lot of stress," Kemp said.

COURSES

Classes will go abroad over winter break

CRYSTAL GOERING
Collegian

For most students, the holidays mean home and family. But for a few who are taking winter intersession courses, the semester break means visiting a foreign country.

The courses, which are offered through the University, provide credit hours to students who need more to graduate or who simply want to experience a foreign culture.

Artyce Hedrick, instructor of clothing textiles and design, will be making her third trip to London taking students for winter intersession courses.

She said she believes going to a foreign country can be a useful teaching tool for those who don't want to learn only in the classroom.

"Most of the students going are people in clothing and textile design," she said.

"We have them do research on the places they will visit, and I require them to keep a journal. This makes them tie everything together."

Hedrick said her students will be seeing many sites in and around London, like Stratford-On-Avon, Bath and Stonehenge, in addition to viewing clothing styles and manufacturing.

"We will see some of the most wonderful costume collections in the world. For those in marketing, we'll see big shopping areas, too. It's the one chance to see expensive clothes and furniture," she said.

John Daly, associate professor of history, will also be escorting about 30 students abroad and behind what used to be the Iron Curtain.

St. Petersburg and Moscow are the destinations of Daly and his students, who are taking the course "Topics in Comparative History" for intersession.

"This is a tour for people who are inclined to take chances, but they get bigger rewards," Daly said.

This will be Daly's seventh trip to Russia but his first working with intersession.

Students will tour the Kremlin and view the tomb of Peter the Great, among other sites.

He said touring Russia is a lot easier since the fall of communistn.

Daly said traveling abroad teaches students valuable lessons.

"I look at this as total immersion," he said.

"I think it's one thing to read a history book — it's another to see Red Square."

CAMPUS

Professors reminisce about JFK

JEFF GAMBER
Collegian

Thirty years ago, on Nov. 22, 1963, an event took place that stands out as clearly today in the minds of people who lived through it as the day it happened. That event was the assassination of president John F. Kennedy.

Robin Higham, professor of history, began working at K-State the same year as Kennedy's death. He still remembers in vivid detail the day the president was killed.

"As it happens, the history department had a lunch in the Union in the Bluemont Room. Professor Gilbert Fite, from the University of Oklahoma, was giving a talk. I believe it was in agricultural history. I believe I had a class, and I went out of the room, and students had what were then early transistor radios. It was sort of quiet, so I asked some student what was going on, and he said Kennedy had been assassinated.

"I think I wrote a note on my pocket pad and went back in and handed it to the head of the department. I went on to class, and of course there was considerable discussion after that," Higham said.

He said the initial feelings he and many other people had were those of shock at the news and disappointment at the loss of what Kennedy represented.

"I guess, you know, I was shocked, somewhat disappointed. I had been at the University of North Carolina when Kennedy had come and given one of his speeches there. He was a very different person from Eisenhower, and I think we all at that time were still expecting a lot from him. Certainly he was a generational shift. He was so much younger than Ike. Ike really represented in some senses the World War I generation, and Kennedy represented the World War II generation. He was 42, and I was about 38, so we were pretty close in age.

"I'm not sure there was a long reaction, but I certainly think many people were shocked. I mean, there had not been an American president assassinated since McKinley. It was very sort of un-American activity. There was speculation, of course — a number of different theories," Higham said.

Apart from the shock of a president being assassinated, many people felt a greater loss because they could empathize with Kennedy, he said.

"I think in many ways people could empathize with Kennedy. You know, there were the boyish good looks. He'd been a PT boat captain. Ike had great public presence, but I think people held him somewhat more in awe. He was a five-star general.

"And I can empathize with Kennedy because he and I both were in London in 1938. I was in London again in 1962 at the time of the Cuban missile crisis, and I felt Kennedy reacted in the Cuban missile crisis very much as we thought Chamberlain should have, but we now know Chamberlain couldn't. But Kennedy was there, and one of the things he learned was you have to be strong and stand up," Higham said.

Dr. Jean Sloop, music professor, also remembers with great clarity how she heard of the president's death.

She said when she first heard of Kennedy's death, she was in rehearsal in the chapel for a faculty recital when a student ran through the door and said, "My God, they've killed the president." She said the faculty members decided to go on with the recital, and they dedicated it to Kennedy's memory.

She said that one of her first feelings related to the president's death was one of uncertainty.

"I distinctly remember momentarily, for about a day, having an anchorless feeling and thinking 'Good God, the head of state is gone — what happens now?'"Sloop said.

She said she later felt thankful that she lived in the United States because the country had procedures for dealing with the loss of a leader without reverting to anarchy.

She said that the loss of the president really didn't hit home with her until a year later when she was in Vienna, Austria, on a Fulbright Scholarship, and the Viennese, who were very attached to Kennedy, had a full funeral mass for him in a downtown Catholic church on the first anniversary of his death.

She said they had a huge bronze casket with an American flag on top at the front of the sanctuary. It was during the Mozart mass that she really felt the loss of the president.

"It was at that point that it really hit me. We were in tears," Sloop said.

"It was such a spontaneous outpouring of affection for the man that there wasn't a dry eye among us," Sloop said.

She said the Viennese were particularly attached to Kennedy because of his youth, good looks and romantic image.

"It really was interesting how much they talked about Kennedy in Vienna," Sloop said.

Agronomy department receives fellowhship

JILL PARADISE
Collegian

The K-State Department of Agronomy was awarded two U.S. Department of Agriculture Fellowships for interdisciplinary doctoral studies in the water sciences. The department was given $108,000 to award to graduate students for three years.

Agronomy faculty members Gerard Kluitenberg, Paul Schwab and Chuck Rice submitted the proposal.

The departments of civil engineering and agricultural engineering are also a part of the project and helped with the proposal.

"This was done as a cooperative effort of the three departments — everyone contributed to make this happen," Kluitenberg, assistant professor of agronomy, said.

The University applied for the fellowship, and after it was awarded to them, they conducted a search for graduate students.

"We were looking for the best students we could find to participate in this program.

"Our goal was to develop interdisciplinary training in water sciences and not to worry about department boundary lines," Kluitenberg said.

Water science is the study of the earth's water budget. The fellowship program emphasizes quantity and quality aspects of surface and subsurface water resources, he said.

Suzette Burckhard, graduate student in civil engineering, and David Sotomayor, graduate student in agronomy, are the students receiving the fellowships.

Burckhard will be working in conjunction with Katherine Banks, assistant professor of civil engineering. Burckhard's research topic is "The Impact of Vegetation on the Movement of Heavy Metals in Contaminated Soils."

"We will be working on ways to save money, preserve lands and prevent other hazards from happening," Burckhard said.

Sotomayor will be assisting Chuck Rice, associate professor of agronomy.

Sotomayor's topic is "Factors Affecting Denitrification in Subsurface Environments."

"The importance of this process is that it can serve as a mechanism for nitrates or other contaminants' removal," Sotomayor said.

Dean travels to Austria for leadership program

CHAD HARRIS
Collegian

Carol Peak, director of the Kansas Center for Rural Initiatives, spent a week in Salzburg, Austria, in October because of her involvement with the Kellogg Foundation.

The Kellogg Foundation was founded in the 1930s by the Kellogg cereal company. The week in Austria was a final meeting for Class 1 of the Kellogg International Leadership Program.

Her role as a fellow involves different activities, including developing leadership skills and designing a community-based project.

Peak was one of 13 fellows chosen from the U.S. A total of 60 fellows from 17 different countries were selected.

She said she was picked for the foundation after applying and interviewing, which involved more than 400 applicants.

Peak also said her acquaintance and work with Marvin Kaiser, former associate dean of the College of Arts and Sciences and a Kellogg national fellow, helped her with the opportunity.

Kaiser, dean of liberal arts and sciences at Portland State University, said he encouraged Peak to consider applying for the fellow position.

"I thought Carol would be an excellent candidate because of her leadership campaigns, primarily through implementing the rural initiatives program at K-State. Her exposure to such a program would be of a great benefit both ways," he said.

Peak said this was the final meeting during the four years of her involvement.

As a fellow, Peak has attended meetings in Brazil and South Africa. Peak said she had mixed feelings about the end of her involvement.

"Because it was the last meeting, everyone was pretty sad. It was a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity, but we all agreed to look to it as a beginning, rather than an end, to keep the outlook for the future positive," Peak said.

The Kellogg Foundation conducts these grant-making activities in the U.S., Africa, and South and Central America.

Peak said she enjoyed her experience with the different people of the different countries best.

"I had the opportunity to do many leadership activities.

"It was interesting working with such a diverse group, and through our diversity, we really learned how much strength we had," Peak said.

She said her involvement as a Kellogg fellow was a one-time chance, which would mean no more attendance at the annual meetings.

However, she said she plans on contributing any way she can toward the Foundation.

YOU'RE ASKING ME?

by Cassandra Duveaux

■ Letters to Cassandra Duveaux may be submitted in person or by mail to the Kansas State Collegian, c/o Cassandra Duveaux, Kedzie 116, Manhattan, Kan., 66506.

Cassandra reserves the right to edit the content. Unless otherwise specified, all letters will be open for publication. Correspondence designated as "private" or "not for publication" will be kept in the strictest confidence. The advice presented in this column is solely the opinion of the columnist and does not reflect the opinion of the Collegian or K-State.

Dear Cassandra,

I am a male first-year student here at K-State and thought I'd write in response to the Nov. 15 letter about men scratching themselves in pubic, I mean public.

I think women should get off their high horses and quit bitching about men scratching in pubic, I mean public. Upon several occasions I have observed women adjusting their brassieres in public, always playing with shoulder straps or fidgeting with the underarm straps.

I personally have never openly mentioned this to any female, because I didn't want to be rude, but it doesn't seem to work the other way around, I guess.

Not only do they adjust themselves, but they often show the "over-the-shoulder-boulder-holder" straps, which are occasionally more like pebbles — but I digress.

How often do you see a guy's briefs sticking out of his pants or through the zipper of his pants? Just thought you might like a real-male response to the topic.

Signed,
Itchy and Scratchy

Dear Itchy,

With your sexist comment about "pebbles" I realized at once how cheap and stupid your "real-male response" was — but I digress. So much for your trying not to be rude.

Dear Cassandra,

I was thinking about Thanksgiving break the other day. I don't want to be with my family. They're really not good for my mental stability.

How do I tell them I'm not coming home and that I'm spending break with my best friend and his parents?

Signed,
I don't wanna go home

Dear Don't Wanna,

So don't go.

Explain to them that as an adult, you've decided to spend this Thanksgiving with your friend. You may want to add that as adults, they should give you the freedom and space that you need. Or just lie and tell them you have Blue Pee Disease and couldn't possibly make it home for the holidays. Surely they'll buy that one, eh?

'Best new act' to play

JEREMY UNRUH
Collegian

"Each of us is born a blank slate or 'Tabula Rasa' that is written on by life experience conveyed through the senses."
—John Locke

Tabula Rasa, the winner of the 1993 Dallas Observer Music Awards 'Best New Act,' will be performing tonight at Rusty's Last Chance Restaurant & Saloon.

PREVIEW

Lawrence's Killcreek is slated to open the show.

"Tabula Rasa is considered the number-one band in Dallas right now," Andrew Holm, area promoter, said. "Killcreek is more upbeat, more guitar driven on a harder edge."

Tabula Rasa, based out of the Dallas/Fort Worth area, was founded in August 1991 by lyricist/lead vocalist Ezra Boggs and violinist/guitarist Douglas Kershaw. Other band members include Steve Duncan on guitar and mandolin, Mike Daane on bass and Jason LaMarca on percussion.

"Tabula Rasa is not real run-of-the-mill music. It's very alternative rock, probably closest to rock implementing different kinds of instruments," David Sirbasku, the band's promoter, said.

In October 1992, Tabula Rasa became one of 300 acts selected from more than 2,500 entries to play the College Music Journal's Music Marathon. They were the first Dallas/Fort Worth group ever to be invited to the conference.

Tabula Rasa's latest single, "Blue Revolution," apparently has turned the heads of some major record-label representatives.

"Tabula Rasa deserves every bit of the attention they will receive for their cut, 'Blue Revolution.' Boggs' voice is undeniable as it is passionate, and Kershaw plays a mean violin. You've got to catch these guys live," C. Michael Mayo wrote in the January issue of Record Reviews magazine.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Take a nostalgic trip to Washington, D.C., and try to douse the eternal flame.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Get involved in campus activities. Start a local chapter of Greenforest Alternative Action Pacifists for Southern Uganda or something.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Mom and Dad are anxiously waiting for you to come home — so make sure your vehicle can make the journey.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): If you're thinking of trying out that new hairstyle, just make sure it will fit inside your Chevette.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Consider becoming a politician. It is morally wrong to allow suckers to keep their money.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Take a hint. If your love interest hasn't known your name for a couple of years, they probably want to break up.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Do laundry. Two months is long enough. Your roommates have contacted exterminators.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Congratulations! You have been selected for placement on some new obnoxious telemarketing lists.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Select your wardrobe carefully today. Beware of underwires!

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): If you're reminiscing about old friends, the truth is you were a total jerk to them and ruined it. Don't even try to reconcile.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Putting off those big assignments has finally caught up with you. Consume legal stimulants in large quantities.

Boston arts arrive downtown

ANGELA YOUNG
Collegian

When Insuk Mullins would visit her husband's family in Boston, she liked going to the Boston Fine Arts Museum and especially the gift shop.

Mullins has now brought a small piece of the Boston museum to Kansas by opening the Museum Store at 111 S. Fourth St. in Manhattan. The products in the store all come from the Boston Fine Arts Museum. Mullins said she receives the stock in her store by ordering from the museum's catalog.

Candles, silk flowers and jewelry are among the store's offerings, but Mullins said notecards and books are the most popular items.

Although she said her clientele are mostly in their 40s and 50s, Mullins said it is because the public is unaware the store exists.

"So far, it's been kind of slow because a lot of people drive by and don't know I'm here," Mullins said.

She said she hoped the holidays would help make more consumers aware of the store.

"I plan on doing more advertising, and I'm having special items in for Christmas," Mullins said. "So, I hope that business will improve for Christmas."

Among the gift items Mullins said she is offering for Christmas are silk scarves, German Santa Claus figurines, crystal candle holders, posters and calendars.

MUSEUM STORE
■ The store, 111 S. Fourth St., is open 10 a.m. to 8 p.m., Monday through Friday and 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Saturdays.

Prices at the store range from $10 for notecards to $20 for jewelry to more expensive items such as lamps.

Mullins said her decision to open the store was a combination of wanting to find something to do while her husband is stationed at Fort Riley and her love for the items in the Boston museum's gift shop.

"I wanted to do something for myself to pass the time, and I really wanted it to be with these types of items," she said. "When we were in Boston, I'd go in there, and in my mind I'd think that I liked these things and I'd like to have a place of my own that sold similar things someday."

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD

Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.

Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.

Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

CATEGORIES

To help you find what you are looking for, the classified ads have been arranged by category and sub-category. All categories are marked by one of the large images, and sub-categories are preceded by a number designation.

Legislators offer views of NAFTA

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Expectations that farm and aircraft exports will sharply increase made an affirmative vote on NAFTA easy Wednesday night for all but one House member from Kansas — Rep. Jim Slattery, the Democratic candidate for governor.

Slattery, D-Topeka, was the lone opponent in Kansas' entire congressional delegation as the House passed the North American Free Trade Agreement on a 234-200 vote.

Senate Republican Leader Bob Dole of Kansas predicted easy passage of the treaty in the Senate, probably before the Thanksgiving recess.

"NAFTA's a lock," he said.

Sen. Nancy Kassebaum, R-Kan., said the House vote was historic and signaled that the United States is ready to compete and expand trade, not turn inward and retreat from the future.

Slattery's decision to vote no made a lot of points with Kansas labor unions and will help in the Democratic race for governor, but Slattery said he opposed NAFTA because American wages might be dragged down by the Mexican government's policy of keeping its workers' earnings artificially low.

"U.S. production workers are justified in their fear of NAFTA as it is currently written," Slattery said.

"This country must not sanction any agreement that puts American workers at a competitive disadvantage."

More typical was the stance of Rep. Dan Glickman, D-Wichita, who said Kansas agriculture and manufacturing — such as Wichita's Boeing plant — would both benefit from the gradual removal of Mexican trade barriers.

"It will enhance American power and prestige in the world," said Glickman, chairperson of the House Intelligence Committee. "It makes good sense for America's economic future."

Glickman said rejection of the treaty would hearken to the America of a half-century ago, when isolationism damaged the nation politically and economically.

"It takes us back to the era of the 1920s and the '30s, when we buried our heads in the sand, hoped for a happy world — and set the stage for the Depression and World War II," he said.

Rep. Pat Roberts, the ranking Republican on the House Agriculture Committee, said he decided to support NAFTA long before President Clinton agreed to ask the Canadian government to change its durum wheat policies.

"No deals have been made in the Pat Roberts office," Roberts, R-Dodge City, said. "I have been for NAFTA."

U.S. farmers said Canadian growers of durum wheat, used to make pastas, benefit from unfair transportation subsidies from their government.

Canada now has 25 percent of the U.S. durum wheat market.

Roberts said the agreement will mean millions of dollars in higher farm exports to Mexico and creation of thousands of jobs nationally during the coming years.

No NAFTA would mean a return to more government programs aimed at propping up the family farm.

"If we reject NAFTA, we reject the kinds of gains that we have made in terms of farm income," Roberts said.

Speaker stresses respect

"I'm glad it's done, but it doesn't really deal with First Amendment rights," Mann said. "We need protection for our sacred sites."

Karen Baird-Olson, assistant professor of sociology, said the message of Mann's speech was respect for each other and for American Indian spirituality.

"Cultural differences don't mean inferiority — they mean strength," Mann said. "We need to respect each other as the four children of this Earth."

Mann is a visiting professor at Haskell Indian Nations University in Lawrence.

Senate looks at allocation

In other business, Senate will consider the educational opportunity fund allocation for fiscal year 1995. David Frese, deputy student body vice president, said the board of regents returns 2 percent of tuition money to each regents university. The money is used in allocations to under-represented students and student salaries. Frese said the amount of EOF money requested is higher than what is available.

"As a result, we had to make some very difficult cuts."

K-State graduate student serves residency at zoo

BRENT DUNGAN
Collegian

Imagine a job description that entails being in a cage with a wild lion or gorilla.

Dr. Sandy Wilson, graduate student in veterinary medicine, faces this kind of work every day so that she can keep the animals of the Topeka Zoo healthy.

Wilson is working at the Topeka Zoo as part of a three-year residency program.

She will spend two years working at the zoo and will return to K-State to complete her master's study of the nutritional needs of iguanas.

This residency is different than most because Wilson doesn't work under a staff, only observing what happens. She serves as the primary veterinarian at the zoo.

"On a day-to-day basis, she's the first line of veterinary medicine," said Dr. James Carpenter, associate professor of clinical sciences.

Wilson said she is responsible for the medical care of the entire collection of animals.

Her duties include giving examinations, giving vaccinations and X-rays and performing surgeries.

Veterinarians from K-State and senior veterinarian students go to Topeka to help Wilson with major procedures where more than one veterinarian is needed, Carpenter said.

Such procedures may include implanting a birth-control device in a lion or putting a gorilla under anesthesia, Carpenter said. This is a unique program because most students don't have this much control over their residencies, he said.

"It's a small zoo, so they really get first-hand knowledge and provide most of the veterinary input," he said. "She basically functions as a staff veterinarian."

Wilson is only the second student to participate in this program, Carpenter said. The program was started in 1990.

Carpenter said this is a good program because K-State, Wilson and the Topeka Zoo are gaining something from the experience.

Meetings between K-State veterinarians and the Topeka staff have been positive, Carpenter said.

"She has an outstanding personality and works well with the staff," Carpenter said of Wilson.

"You have to work with a wide range of people and, in many cases, emotional issues."

Wilson said she enjoys working with the staff and feels her experience in Topeka will be a big help in her future.

"The staff is very enthusiastic and easy to work with," she said.

She said she is also open about her future career as a zoological veterinarian.

"Opportunities for zoological veterinarians are few and far between," she said.

Night centers on African culture

JILL PARADISE
Collegian

The African Student Union will be presenting African Music Night on Saturday. The evening is sponsored by the International Coordinating Council.

African snacks will be served from 6:30 to 7:30 p.m., followed by a music performance, which will last until 9 p.m. The African snacks are from four different countries, and they will be accompanied by a ginger drink. The evening is open to the public.

AFRICAN NIGHT

- African Music Night will be in the Manhattan High School Auditorium Saturday.
- Admission is $3 for adults and $1.50 for children under the age of 14. Snacks are included in the price.

"We would like to share our rich and diverse culture with the Manhattan community," said Philomina Gwanfogbe, graduate student in food and nutrition and president of ASU.

"We believe that through sharing our rich cultures, the community will have an idea of what we do back home in Africa," he said.

The musical performance will include traditional African music and plays portraying African society and will end with African pop music, said Kouassi Kouakou, graduate student in grain science and president of ICC.

"We will be celebrating diversities of diversity," Kouakou said.

All of the performers are either K-State students or children of students, and traditional attire will be worn while they are performing, Gwanfogbe said.

"We are hoping that, through our sharing,+ people will get to know us better and change some of the myths about African culture," he said.

"Everybody is welcome to come, students as well as the Manhattan community," Gwanfogbe said.

Student Senate: faculty doesn't care about students

MIKE ZAMRZLA
Collegian

Faculty Senate was accused of disregarding student wishes during the Student Senate meeting Thursday night.

Faculty Senate voted May 11 to implement a plus-minus grading system at K-State. The system is scheduled for implementation in the fall of 1994.

Steffany Carrel, student representative to Faculty Senate, said Faculty Senate does not care what students think.

"Faculty Senate is going to do what they want to do," she said. "I don't think they really care."

Carrel said Faculty Senate should care because petitions with more than 3,000 student signatures have been collected opposing the plus-minus grading system. The problem is that Faculty Senate does not care, Carrel said.

"So much for democracy," she said. "It's kind of like they've said, 'Tough if you students don't like it. We pass the rules here.'"

Phil Anderson, faculty representative to Student Senate, said when the plus-minus system was initially proposed, it was democratic.

"Faculty Senate may be a little bit confused because this issue started a couple of years ago as a student-initiated referendum," Anderson said. "As a matter of fact, it was started by a student in one of my speech classes."

What happened two years ago does not have any relevance to what students want today, Carrel said.

"I would say right now maybe one out of every 50 students likes this," she said.

"But that doesn't seem to matter. Students say they don't want this, and Faculty Senate says, 'Well, we do.'"

Anderson said he realized that Carrel was probably right.

"Most of the students in my speech class are against it," he said.

Fine Arts Council meets to discuss fee use

TED KADAU JR.
Collegian

The issue of empowering students was placed before the members of the Fine Arts Council Thursday evening in the Student Governing Association conference room.

Members of the Fine Arts Council met with several department heads funded by the fine arts fee.

The fee, which is $7.40 and is included in student fees, makes up funds that are allocated to several University departments, including English, speech, architecture, art, modern languages, music, the Office of Multicultural Affairs and Ebony Theater.

The purpose of the meeting was two-fold.

First, the Fine Arts Council wanted to review a memorandum that would place guidelines on how the funds are to be spent. Second, the council wanted to look into placing more of the responsibility of spending into the hands of students.

Few guidelines placed on the funds, and much of the spending power is controlled by faculty.

The guidelines under the memorandum include limiting expenditures to only programs that enrich cultural experiences for K-State students. This would exclude the fine arts fee paying for travel, programs not all students qualify to attend and the purchase of services and equipment that the departments would buy regardless of the fee.

This memorandum would also pass rules requiring any purchase of more than $250 to first be cleared through the council. Salaries would not be allowed as expenditures unless allowed as programming efforts, and the council would decide if magazines qualify as programming.

The issue of empowering students was placed before council members and faculty by Dan Lewerenz, junior in philosophy and chairman of the fine arts council. The empowerment of students would most likely come in the form of separate student councils for each department.

"I feel like the students have a stake here and should have a say," Lewerenz said. "After all, it is their money."

McCain Auditorium Director Richard Martin said McCain is not on the list of those departments financed but would eventually fall under the music department funding. He said he simply does not have the time for another committee.

"I feel like the students have a stake here and should have a say. After all, it is their money."

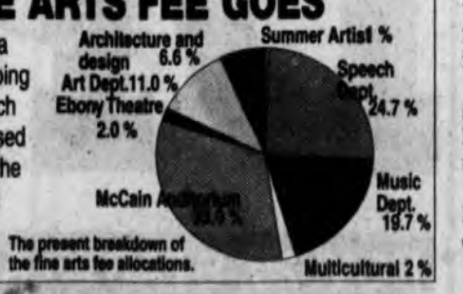
DAN LEWERENZ
CHAIRMAN OF FINE ARTS COUNCIL

"Eighty-hour work weeks are the norm for me," Martin said. "All I can do now is make minimum committee requirements.

"We already have a student counsel at McCain, and we receive around 39 percent student support and input on our programs."



Martin also said when a venue at McCain does poorly, he would rather it be his head on the block rather than that of students.

"If an event ultimately goes belly-up, I know better than most

WHERE THE FINE ARTS FEE GOES

The fine arts fee is presently $7.40 a semester with the largest chunks going to McCain Auditorium and the speech and music departments. The proposed $8.80 fee would allocate money to the the English, modern languages and international department as well as student organizations.

Covert assassination plans disclosed

WASHINGTON (AP) — Days after taking office in 1961, the Kennedy administration asked the CIA to develop a standby capability for carrying out assassinations of foreign leaders, according to newly declassified documents.

At the time, the Kennedy administration had inherited a plan to kill Cuban President Fidel Castro and, according to the documents, the White House apparently was interested in an all-purpose assassinations unit for dealing with adversaries elsewhere.

But the documents offer no evidence that the so-called Executive Action Capability was ever used beyond the various efforts to kill Castro. Former President Reagan issued an executive order early in his administration prohibiting U.S. officials from engaging in assassinations of foreign leaders or promoting such activities.

The disclosure about the Kennedy administration's plan is outlined in a 1967 report by the CIA inspector general, J.S. Earman, and was released by the agency as part of a new program to allow greater access to CIA files.

Much of the report covers the various well-publicized CIA efforts to assassinate Castro during the 1960s. These efforts were reviewed in considerable detail by a Senate committee in 1975, which concluded there were eight such attempts on Castro's life. Castro himself has claimed there were 25.

Some of the schemes sought to enlist underworld figures to carry out the plots, while others were aimed principally at causing Castro embarrassment rather than killing him.

Vietnam's conduct under investigation

HANOI, Vietnam (AP) — Vietnamese officials were trying to downplay a new flap over alleged human-rights abuses on Thursday, worried it could hurt chances of diplomatic relations with the United States.

Vietnam accused Australia of meddling by proposing to send an Australian delegation to Vietnam to investigate charges of rights violations. But officials said the investigators would be allowed in.

Human rights is among the most sensitive political issues in Vietnam. The United States also raised the issue in meetings in Washington in October and November with high-ranking Vietnamese officials.

Washington has told Vietnam that human-rights abuses could slow the lifting of the U.S. trade embargo and the establishment of normal relations sought by Hanoi.

Canada seeks to renegotiate NAFTA

TORONTO (AP) — Prime Minister Jean Chretien, barely two weeks in office, already faces an unenviably tough foreign-affairs challenge: getting Washington to renegotiate parts of NAFTA.

Sticking to an election campaign promise, Chretien said Thursday he would demand a new code in the trade deal defining subsidies and dumping, and for the same protection for energy resources that Mexico won for its oil industry.

If he doesn't get it, the prime minister said, Ottawa will not proclaim the North American Free Trade Agreement as law, even though it was approved by Parliament in May.

"Our position is still the same," he said after the U.S. House of Representatives passed NAFTA 234-200 Wednesday night.

The question now is just how tough Chretien wants to get. If Canada backs out of NAFTA, there is nothing to prevent the United States from simply transforming it into a bilateral deal with Mexico. That would leave Canada with its original bilateral agreement.

Gideon gets hard 40 for Pittsburg murder

COLUMBUS, Kan. (AP) — A man freed on parole after serving 10 years in prison for rape received a life sentence Thursday for killing a woman who worked with him at a Pittsburg restaurant.

Cherokee County District Judge David Brewster ordered a hard-40 life sentence on the first-degree murder charge for Donald Ray Gideon, 31, meaning he must spend at least 40 years in prison before becoming eligible for parole.

The judge also ruled that additional terms totaling more than 57 years, to be served consecutively, not begin until after parole on the murder count.

Gideon's case attracted wide attention, with many people expressing concern and outrage that his victim and the managers at the restaurant where they worked knew nothing about his criminal background. Gideon admitted killing Stephanie Schmidt, a 19-year-old Pittsburg State University student from Leawood. She disappeared July 1 after being seen leaving a Frontenac bar with him.

Gideon, who has spent more than half his life behind bars, pleaded guilty in October to first-degree murder, aggravated kidnapping, aggravated criminal sodomy and rape.

Pay-per-hour plan put on hold

CRISTINA JANNEY
Collegian

The Kansas Board of Regents voted Thursday to postpone a move to per-credit-hour pricing at K-State and the University of Kansas.

Tuition would have been changed to $57 per credit hour for undergraduate courses. Students taking between seven and 15 hours would save money with this system.

The new pricing system was scheduled to take effect in 1995.

Ray Hauke, financial adviser for the regents, said decreases in enrollment at these two universities, coupled with losses from the pricing change, would be a budget strain.

Enrollment is projected to increase with the graduation of a larger high school class in 1996 and the regents plan to implement the new pricing then.

The board did not take action on a proposal to lower the per-credit-hour pricing at Wichita State University from $57 per credit hour to $37 per credit for lower-division courses in 1995.

"This price is supposed to be a medium between the tuition at other regent universities and community colleges," Hauke said. "It is a little higher than community-college tuition and significantly lower that the tuition at the other universities."

Hauke said the proposal was the result of decreased enrollment at Wichita State the last few years.

The regents referred the policy to its Tuition and Fee Committee.

In other business, the board unanimously approved teacher education program admission standards.

"This will ensure our best and brightest go into teaching," Regent Shirley Palmer said.

Entrance into regent university teacher education programs will require a curriculum of basic skills courses and passing basic skills tests in reading, writing and mathematics. The programs will also require a PreProfessional Skills Test.

Dave Shulenburger, Vice Chancellor for Academic Affairs at KU, said the curriculum requirements and course completion was a better indicator of student success than a test.

He said the test would have a negative effect on minority students and not add to the programs.

"It would be a shame to use this test if it is not a good indicator, and it doesn't add to students' knowledge," Shulenburger said.

Regent Frank Sabatini said the standards would be reviewed and could be changed if the test was detrimental.

The Task Force on Financial Assistance recommended, and the board approved, an initiative to the Kansas Legislature to consolidate the state's financial-aid programs.

The regents staff recommended the programs move away from narrow award criteria such as GPAs and ACTs and concentrate on awarding funds to students who have a sound academic background and who need the money.

"The argument for what constitutes a scholar creates a lot of unpleasantness when we are trying to be supportive," John Montgomery, board chairman, said.

The regents expect the Legislative Education Planning Committee to introduce a revision to a law governing the relationship between community colleges and universities.

Tuition laws state that community colleges must get permission before teaching a course in a county with a regent main campus.

Cloud County Community College has argued that the K-State campus at Salina is not a main campus and does not have to seek permission from K-State to teach classes in Saline County.

The regents hoped the revision would require Cloud County to consult K-State, before duplicating courses.

All of the universities gave presentations on teacher evaluations. The regents stressed the need for performance based pay and tenure. They also encouraged regular student evaluations of teaching and advising.

James Coffman, K-State provost, said the University evaluates all its tenured and untenured faculty. Between 400 and 500 faculty members are evaluated by their students every semester.

Coffman said the student and performance evaluations are very important in pay and promotion issues at K-State.

Regents search for new director

CRISTINA JANNEY
Collegian

The Kansas Board of Regents will be interviewing three candidates for its executive director position Thursday and Friday.

CANDIDATES
- Edward Jakubauskas, higher education consultant in Eastern Europe.
- Richard Crofts, assistant to the chancellor at Mankato State University
- Stephen Jordan, deputy executive director for finance and planning, Arizona Board of Regents

The board-appointed committee narrowed the field from 65 applicants to three earlier this month.

K-State Vice President for Administration and Finance Tom Rawson, member of the search committee, said the committee looked for someone with campus experience, who was very familiar with higher-education issues.

He said the committee also tried to look for someone with university-teaching experience, so that they would be able to understand a teacher's viewpoint.

The legislative session will be the main challenge facing the new director, Rawson said.

"There are a variety of legislative matters the regents are sponsoring, including the partner for excellence program," he said.

The partnership for excellence program would increase faculty salaries over the next three years.

Rawson said the board hoped to select a candidate at its meeting Friday and have the position filled by mid-January.

Stanley Koplik vacated the executive director position in September to become chancellor of the University Massachusetts system. The position was filled on an interim basis by Warren Corman, regents director of facilities.

Union expansions should include the students' input

The opinions of students, faculty and staff have been solicited in the past weeks in regard to the possible expansion of the K-State Union.

Behind the many creative, if impractical, ideas for things such as drive-through food service and valet parking can be found many legitimate student concerns.

Demands for more study space and more variety in the food service are foremost.

But other ideas, such as a full-service postal center and a "satellite" Union on the far side of campus, may hold promise, too. And, of course, the elusive parking-garage idea has become involved.

Students will be the main benefactors of any improvements or expansion of the Union.

It is important they remain involved in the decision process to make sure their legitimate concerns don't get buried among the more colorful ideas.

The Union staff has also come up with several ideas for improvements in the arrangement and scope of the Union's services, and it has a genuine need for expansion in storage space and other behind-the-scenes necessities.

If the staff is to provide services in the best manner possible, it is important it has a clear idea of what the students want out of the Union so that it can work out the specifics.

As such, the student population needs to discuss the issue and come up with a general agenda for improvement that our student representatives can call upon when it comes time to divide the spoils.

So, contact your Student senators and the Union Governing Board to express concerns about and ideas for renovation.

The powers in charge are looking for some student input in this process — it is up to us to provide it.

▶ DIVERSITY

How boring it would be if you were like me

Editor,

I am writing in support of Brooke Graber and the message I believe she was attempting to convey through her Nov. 3 column.

In referring to Dr. Samual Selesnick's defense of Cochlear Corporation, Graber counters with the fact that "the opposition to these implants does not lie with the implants themselves.

The opposition lies in trying to 'fix' each person's physical imperfections so all individuals are the same ... the only difference between a person wearing glasses and a person wearing hearing aids is the fact wearing glasses is more common."

There are all sorts of differences in all human beings, whether it be eye color or the hand we write with.

These are all physical things, just like deafness. Is there really a big difference in being deaf?

So, there's something different in each of us. Whatever happened to individuality? Wouldn't life be incessantly boring if we were all the same?

Graber also made the point that instead of fixing all our so-called imperfections, "maybe we should open our minds and try to understand the differences that make individuals unique." I believe she's got a good point there and that we should listen to her.

Whatever it is that makes us "different" from others, if we lose that, we lose our grasp on humanity, and then there is no reason to live.

▶ ENROLLMENT

Student's rocky road smoothed by Lucille

Editor,

With spring enrollment on the average student's mind, I thought this letter would be most appropriate.

To start off, my enrollment date changed to Nov. 18.

I was supposed to enroll at 8:15 a.m.

I got there and stood in line for 45 minutes.

They told me my time had changed to 9:45 a.m.

Fortunately, students are allowed to enroll 30 minutes before their scheduled time, so I only had to wait an additional 15 minutes.

Finally, one of those nice ladies raised her hand, and I darted to the chair thinking, "Thank God! I might get the classes I want!"

She proceeded to type and look at the computer screen curiously, then slowly turned to me and said, "Your enrollment has a hold on it from the Student Financial Assistance office. Sorry!"

As she turned to me, I saw everything in slow motion, and her voice sounded like a record player turned to the slowest speed. I was in total disbelief.

I stormed out of the room and went to the financial aid office. I explained to them I thought I had paid my fees, where in reality, I hadn't.

I still owed $100.

The lady told me that I could not get an emergency student loan because I did not have any more financial assistance coming in.

When she told me this, I looked at her with my big sad eyes, and she smiled at me and said, "Let me see what I can do."

She finally came back and told me that she had cleared it for me, and I needed to pay the money as soon as I could.

I just want to tell "Lucille" at financial assistance thank you very much!

I had had a whole morning of feeling like a big number. She made me feel like a human being again.

I think the financial aid office should send letters to students who still owe on their fees to let them know before enrollment so they don't have to go through all of this.

Perils of limited foreign language skills

My French IV class is 50 minutes of sheer hell. No, I mean it. Really.

It's no reflection on the poor man who is the professor. He's really a good teacher. My brain just doesn't work in French.

It's a great language; I just can't speak it. I can read it, understand it when it is spoken, but when I go to answer a question in class, my brain goes dead. I confuse the futur with the conditionnel or with the subjonctif.

That's why I so admire the foreign exchange students who come here. It really takes some intelligence to speak two or more languages.

That's also why I get so angry when I hear people saying that this is By God America and if you don't speak English, then you should get the hell out.

Mostly, these words are spoken by people who haven't tried to speak another language.

Well, let me tell you, from my small experience in the modern languages department, speaking another language is hard.

You feel embarrassed when the words won't come, everyone's staring at you, and you're just sure that you're the only person on the face of the earth that has forgotten what form of the "aller" verb to use.

Well, you're not.

This happens to everyone who is learning to do anything. At some point in the learning process, you will feel like an idiot.

It's a given. Everything from algebra to Spanish is going to teach you something you don't know.

A language just requires that you prove your ignorance, out loud, in front of millions of people, every day.

I'm lucky, actually. I've never gone somewhere where English wasn't the only language taught, so I only get to feel stupid in French class.

(This isn't a place for commentary by my other professors.)

I'm from western Kansas, and we have a lot of immigrants from Mexico and Asia.

During this last summer, we had a lot of tornadoes in the area. One was tracking right through Garden City, and the radio stations were running the "This is a tornado warning" messages in three languages.

Now to a lot of people in the Garden City area, this gets annoying, but I never realized how important it was until I saw a woman from Mexico huddled in my friend's basement.

LOLA SHRIMPLIN

She spoke little to no English, and we spoke no Spanish, which happened to be the language she knew.

To put it mildly, she was terrified. She had a newborn baby, was in a strange country and had no idea what was going on. Her husband could translate for her, but we could see the fear in her face.

Then she heard the radio announcer speaking in Spanish, and she went still. What he announced was the all clear. The relief in her face and body was obvious.

What made the whole situation so sad was that none of us could say anything to help her. If the radio station hadn't been announcing in the three languages, she wouldn't have known when it was safe.

The point to this column is that a lot of people seem to underestimate the effort, time and personal risk it takes to learn another language.

English isn't the only language spoken here in these United States. Never was.

This has always been a country of immigrants, and they all brought their languages with them. It's only because the British managed to make some pretty severe land grabs that we're not all speaking Dutch.

And I like to look at the situation this summer like this:

Don't ask why that woman couldn't speak English.

Ask why we couldn't speak Spanish.

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

NOVEMBER 19, 1993

MENDEZ FIRST-TEAM ALL-AMERICAN

K-State safety Jaime Mendez was one of 24 players named first-team all-American Thursday by the Football News, which released the first all-America team of the 1993 season.

Mendez won first-team all-Big Eight honors in both his sophomore and junior seasons. He enters his final regular-season game against Oklahoma State ranked eighth on the all-time Big Eight interception list with 15.

DAVID MAYES/Collegian

UNLV's Henry Bailey is brought down by K-State's Steve Hanks, Matt McEwen and DeShawn Fogle during the Wildcats' 36-20 win. The Cats, 7-2-1 and 3-2-1 in the conference, travel to Stillwater, Okla., Saturday to play their last Big Eight Conference game against Oklahoma State, 3-7 overall and 0-6 in the league.

Motivation not a problem for Wildcats

DEREK SIMMONS
Collegian

K-State and Oklahoma State are two teams on opposite ends of the Big Eight Conference spectrum.

The Wildcats, 7-2-1 overall and 3-2-1 in the conference, are trying to lock up their second-best season since the Depression, while the Cowboys, 3-7 overall and 0-6 in the league, are attempting to avoid their 0-7 season in the Big Eight.

K-State travels to Stillwater, Okla., Saturday for a 2 p.m. kickoff at Lewis Field. It will be the last conference contest for both teams this year.

A Wildcat win would establish a tie for the second-best mark in school history since 1931. The 1910 team finished with a 10-1 record.

A loss for the Cowboys would yield their second shutout in conference play. OSU's 1963 team was 0-6, but K-State canceled its Nov. 23 appointment. The Cowboys posted an 0-6-1 mark in 1991, gaining a 6-6 tie with Iowa State.

Last week, K-State rattled Missouri 31-21, which qualified the Cats for their second postseason game. Oklahoma State, on the other hand, was humiliated by Oklahoma 31-0 and managed just 31 yards of total offense.

BIG EIGHT FINALE

■ The Cats (7-2-1) finish their regular season Saturday at Oklahoma State (3-7). The game begins at 2 p.m.

"Other than just going out there and getting kicked, I don't have any explanation," Oklahoma State coach Pat Jones said.

"I think part of the reason was tied in, to a degree, to the field position, on a wet field against a quality defensive unit. That's a tough duty. In all honesty, our execution was not all that bad. Basically, we just got whipped."

K-State coach Bill Snyder said the struggling Cowboys may not be a valid indication of what they are able to do.

"They didn't get a whole lot of yards last week, but I've played against Pat's football teams too many times, and I look at some of the people they have and can't tell you what happened in the Oklahoma ball game," Snyder said. "They've got some talented youngsters there.

"They have always been a very proficient, run-oriented football team. That may not have been what happened last week, but they always used their offense to keep them in ball games, to keep them close. They have always been able to do that."

The Cats are ranked 20th in both the Associated Press and USA Today/CNN Coaches Polls and can ill afford a loss, which could drop them out of the rankings.

Iowa State spoiled K-State's bid for a top-10 finish two weeks ago, when the team upset the Cats 27-23. K-State entered the contest ranked 18th in the AP poll but fell to 24th with the setback.

With all the elements surrounding the Cats, Snyder said motivation shouldn't be a problem.

"There is an option for bowl games," he said. "The fact that we have the opportunity to be ranked among the top 20 is a factor. And that has special significance for our players, especially out seniors. There's enough there to keep our youngsters motivated."

A Wildcat win would keep the Cats in the hunt for the Aloha Bowl, while a loss would almost secure a trip to the Copper Bowl.

Snyder said the Cats have had ample opportunity to study the Cowboys, and K-State's loss at Ames, Iowa, should be a lesson.

"Our football team has an opportunity to see 10 game films of Oklahoma State, and they see what they are capable of doing, so you're not pulling the wool over your players' eyes," Snyder said.

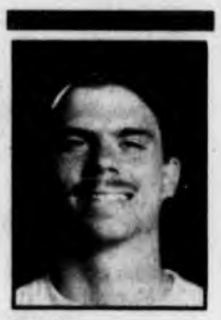
"They see that there is the capacity for Oklahoma State to play us off of our feet. And our football team understands that anyone can get anyone on any given day."

Jones, who is in his 10th season with the Cowboys, said OSU's final chance at a Big Eight win won't be simple.

"K-State is playing with a lot of enthusiasm," he said.

"They are playing with a lot of confidence — this will not be an easy game for us. K-State has got a veteran offensive front, their big people. Chad May, who entered this year, has probably got to be the offensive newcomer of the year in the Big Eight. Defensively, they are playing extremely hard.

"This is a very good K-State football team. This did not happen by mistake, so we will certainly have our hands full with them."



COLUMN

Cats earned right to hula

The K-State Wildcat football team is going bowling. If that isn't a wild enough statement for you, here's another one. The people of Wildcatland are embroiled in argument over which bowl to choose.

Yes, you heard it right. Not only are the Cats going bowling, but they almost assuredly have their choice of where they want to go.

Let me explain. By contract, the third-place team from the Big Eight is invited to play in the Aloha Bowl Dec. 25. The fourth-place team, also by contract, is invited to the Copper Bowl, to be played Dec. 29.

BOB LEHMAN

If the Wildcats win tomorrow at Oklahoma State, and Nebraska defeats Oklahoma next weekend, the Cats will finish in third. The Sooners would fall into fourth.

Both of these outcomes have a probability of, I'd say, 97 percent.

Now you may be wondering what, exactly, is the problem here. Where everybody goes is taken care of by contract. Not so fast.

The Copper Bowl wants K-State. In fact, K-State is at the top of its list. The Aloha Bowl, however, has been less than flattering.

The powers-that-be at the Aloha Bowl have legitimate financial concerns. Last year, when Kansas was the team of choice in Hawaii, and the game was everything they could have asked for, the bowl promoters lost money.

They fear that Hawaiians who would be buying the majority of the tickets wouldn't know the difference between K-State and Kansas. And not enough Kansans would be able to afford to make the trip to make up the difference.

In short, the promoters would rather have Oklahoma because they could make more money that way. Or at least avoid losing money. As the situation stands now, with the right teams winning in the next two weeks, the choice isn't going to be made by the bowls. It is going to be made by Coach Bill Snyder and the team (with Oklahoma getting our leftovers).

It seems rather obvious from watching our players on the sidelines in the waning moments of the Missouri game that they want to go hula dancing come December (some advice fellas — take lessons when you get there).

Snyder, ever the diplomat, hasn't really said anything about it other than it is up to the team. I don't really expect anything more out of him until all the games have been played and the choice has to be made. It is rumored that he prefers the prospect of playing in the Copper Bowl. The major reason I can think for this preference is fan support. Let's face it, students would have trouble trying to road trip to Hawaii.

There are so many arguments for and against each bowl. As a fan and a band member, I would like to see the Cats stay in the continental United States. That way, I could go and continue the support I have given to this team for the past five years.

As important as that is to me, I think Snyder is right on the money in putting the players' preferences first. They are the ones who have been working since last spring and deserve to choose their own reward.

The Wildcats have worked extremely hard, and they just may finish in the top three. If they come in third, they should go to the third-place bowl. I consider it an insult that the Aloha Bowl people feel our team is not good enough to play in their bowl. Aloha, Cats.

VOLLEYBALL

Hagemeyer expects strong effort and positive attitude

JEREMY CRABTREE
Collegian

The K-State volleyball team has a 17-match losing streak heading into its final game of the season on Saturday against Iowa State.

Despite the 7-24 record, Coach Patti Hagemeyer expects a strong effort from the Wildcats.

"Against Kansas was the first time that we really came together," Hagemeyer said.

"Even though we lost, it was the best that we've played all season."

In the game against Kansas Wednesday, the Cats captured the second and third games of the match before falling in the fourth and fifth games to the Jayhawks.

The Cats lost the match 3-2.

"It was disappointing that we played so well and lost," Hagemeyer said.

"We're going to come back against Iowa State and play hard.

"Iowa State has a chance to go to the Big Eight Tournament if they beat us," Hagemeyer said. "We have the opportunity to knock them off and keep them from going to the tournament."

The Cyclones are tied for fourth place in the Big Eight with Kansas. If the Cats beat the Cyclones, the Jayhawks would go to the Big Eight Tournament in Omaha, Neb.

CATS' LAST CHANCE

■ The volleyball team, 0-11 in Big Eight play, will play its last match Saturday against Iowa State. The match starts at 7 p.m.

Senior outside hitter Stephanie Liester said the match will be important because it's the seniors' last match.

"I was disappointed that we let the match against Kansas slip away," Liester said. "We want to win the last one bad. If it knocks Iowa State out of the tournament, that's good, but we are playing for K-State and not to let KU into the tournament."

Both Liester and Hagemeyer said the team's attitude will remain positive despite the loss to Kansas.

"I'm going to expect a tough and intense practice before we play Iowa State," Liester said.

"I'm going to expect different results this weekend."

The match will be the last for Liester, middle blocker Angie McKee and setter Wendy Garrett.

BIG EIGHT LEADING RUSHER STOPPED FOR $141 WORTH OF SHOPLIFTING

■ Running back June Henley, the Kansas freshman who leads the Big Eight Conference in rushing, has been ordered to appear in court after being accused of shoplifting. Henley was stopped by a security officer with the items, which had a reported value of $141. Doug Vance, the university's assistant athletic director for media relations, said the university and coach Glen Mason had no comment. Henley has rushed for 1,009 yards and 11 touchdowns this season.

Gagne disappointed by not receiving award

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Kansas City shortstop Greg Gagne had the best season of his career in 1993, making just 10 errors in 159 games, but didn't win the Gold Glove.

He doesn't bother to hide his feelings about the voting.

"I think I was hurt a little bit," Gagne said Thursday by telephone after he was named Royals Player of the Year. "I was disappointed a little bit. I thought 'Wow, I hit well and played good defense.'"

The American League Gold Glove for shortstop went to Omar Vizquel of Seattle, who made five more errors than Gagne.

Gagne, who led the league with a .986 fielding percentage, was diplomatic in talking about another player. But he was at a loss to explain the reasoning of the coaches and managers who vote for the Gold Glove.

"It was kind of discouraging," Gagne said. "But it's time for me to go on. I don't really know how they vote. If it was me, I would look at games played, innings played. Then you have to look at chances.

"It would be a tough choice between Omar and myself and Cal Ripken and whomever. Not getting it was a little tough to swallow at first."

Futures/Options Trading Seminar students throw in $100 for the chance to invest

BRENT DUNGAN
Collegian

Students are willing to gamble $100 of their own money in the chance that they might profit from the experience.

The students gamble as part of an experimental class called Futures/Options Trading Seminar.

Ted Schroeder, associate professor of agricultural economics, said as far as he knows, this is the only class like this in the whole country.

Students agree to invest $100 their own money to pool with other students for the purpose of investing in different markets with minimal faculty interference.

The students had $4,100 to invest in various markets including corn, wheat and soybean markets, feeder cattle, silver and frozen concentrate orange juice, Schroeder said. At the end of the semester, the students will liquidate all of their holdings to see if they have made an overall profit or loss on their original investment.

There are 40 students in the class who are divided up into 12 groups. Each group is responsible for coming up with two investment options and presenting it ideas to the class. The class then decides whether to invest in the option by voting.

Each group is responsible for monitoring its investment option and gives reports to the class on how the group is doing. The group then offers advice on whether to stay in a particular market.

"I think it is tremendous to see students interact that way," Schroeder said.

Schroeder said he liked to serve as an observer and let the students decide what to do. Students become aware of current events because they are constantly reviewing government crop reports and certain political issues, like NAFTA, that could possibly affect their investments, he said.

Ahmed Ibrahim, visiting student from Egypt, said he enjoys the class.

"It's a good class because you get to experience an actual trading market," said Ibrahim.

Carolyn Farris, senior in agricultural economics, said this class contributed the knowledge she learned in other futures markets classes.

"When you've done something, you really understand it," said Farris.

The class is mostly composed of agricultural economics majors, Schroeder said, but is open to all students.

Different majors add diversity to the discussion, he said.

Schroeder said the class really prepares students for the real business world.

"In the business world, people must be able to make quick decisions with small amounts of information," Schroeder said. "There are few classes that allow students to make quick decisions that will affect their bottom line."

Crank calls ... a pain in the Butt-Head

Dear Cassandra,

Last weekend, I was the victim of several harassing phone calls. By several, I mean at least a dozen. They were made by a group of teen-agers with nothing better to do, obviously. I called the police, but I don't expect they will be able to do anything about the situation.

You see, though, the funny thing about this, and I didn't realize this until I brought the subject up in front of my roommate and his 14-year-old son, is every time the harassers would call, they would recite some eloquent phrase from "Beavis and Butt-Head."

The 14-year-old brought this to my attention since he is well versed in the art (or lack of) of "Beavis and Butt-Head."

The point of this letter is not to whine about my situation of being harassed, but it does make me wonder if it was this program that was responsible. I mean, isn't it these sort of values this show is promoting?

I wanted to make sure I was sound in my judgments and also to save myself any ridicule from the 14-year-old I live with, so I sat down in front of the television a couple of nights in a row to see for myself what it was all about.

Without getting into all the derogatory opinions I have formed, let me just say I was enlightened by a TV show that enforces a host of socially deviant innuendo, including drug abuse, violence and a generally uncaring attitude for anyone or anything else, not excluding themselves.

My question to you is, how can I gain support for my opinion, if such support is available? Where do we take it from there to get this program eradicated?

Signed,
Beavis and Butt-Ugly

REVIEW

Album features twisted tunes

J. KYLE WYATT
Collegian

The first thing to be said about Tom Waits' latest release, "The Black Rider," is somebody can pick up a Jewish accent by singing along.

The only people to recommend this album to are those who like spooky, dark, circus music and already know of Tom Waits or those who enjoy the William Burroughs sound bites and poems popular on college stations these days.

But if you don't fit these categories and have an open mind, please read on.

The lyrics are, for those unfamiliar with Waits, secondary to his voice and the choice of instruments on the album. His characteristically harsh and gravelly voice adds to the dark and faintly sinister sound of the album.

Add to that the following instruments: the calliope, organ, chamberlain, accordion, bass clarinet, bassoon. ... well, you get the picture.

The result is circus-sounding music twisted from the fun, happy tunes we knew as children to something very strange and more sinister as the album finishes its story.

The album begins with "Lucky Day (Overture)." Quite simply, this is a carnival hawker, Tom Waits, calling all to Harry's Harbor Bizarre to see Ko Ko the Bird Girl, the Three-Headed Baby and Hitler's Brain. The second song, "The Black Rider," again sung by Waits, begins the story proper.

However, added to his characteristic voice is a thick Jewish accent.

Again, this album has a storyline to it.

It fits the story of a clerk who accepts magic bullets from the devil to win the approval to marry a huntsman's daughter. These magic bullets allow the clerk to hit anything he aims at.

Predictably, he runs out and goes to the devil for more. The clerk has of course been warned that "the devil's bargain is a fool's bargain."

The story continues until the clerk goes stark-raving mad and ends up with all the other lunatics in the devil's carnival.

Sound like a story told by parents to keep their children from making pacts with the devil?

Well, set the story to perverted circus music, and it's damn effective.

One last thing to mention. William Burroughs had a definite influence on this album. In fact, one of the high points of the album is when he sings in his weak, old voice: "T'ain't no sin to take off your skin and dance around in your bones. ..."

Senate still hasn't made decision on plus/minus grading system

ecology senator, said he is one student who is not against the plus-minus grading system.

"I like the plus-minus system," Seligman said. "I think it's a good idea."

The reason most students seem to be against plus-minus grading, Seligman said, is because they do not know much about it.

"I think it closes the spectrum between a high grade and a low grade," Seligman said. "Right now, there is no distinction between someone who works hard, attends class and gets an 88 percent and the person who skips class and barely slides by with an 80 percent.

"That's not right."

Besides grading students more fairly, Seligman said the plus-minus system will enhance K-State's reputation as an educational leader.

"We're leading the way instead of following in everyone else's footsteps," Seligman said. "People should be happy K-State is doing this."

Carrel said K-State does not yet have a plus-minus grading system — and she still has hopes it will not.

"It's not dead yet," Carrel said. "We have to prove that it's going to hurt the exceptional student.

"The only way to do that is to come up with data that proves it hurts exceptional students," she said.

Seligman said there is no such proof.

"I really don't see this hurting anyone, certainly not drastically," he said. "I believe most students that get a 4.0 will continue to get a 4.0"

Production question unaswered

how to handle it," he said.

Marci Maullar, assistant professor of speech, also expressed concerns about the student committees.

"The students would essentially have to learn my job every semester," she said.

Maullar, who said the speech department has about an 80 percent student-participation rate, also said less professor input could create problems with theater productions. If a production was chosen by students and was not approved by faculty, the professors could refuse to produce the shows.

"If a faculty member does not like the show, then they do not have to direct or design it," she said.

Conflict solutions were presented in the meeting, such as having each department announce how the funds will be used and what programs will be planned, placing students in charge of funding but giving faculty the final say and possibly alternating between faculty and student committees each year.

"I'm not sure that we can come to any conclusions right now," Lewerenz said. "But knowing the time constraints we were working with, I really didn't expect any conclusions right now. I think there was a lot of progress made. First we'll have to evaluate because so much of it is individualized to the particular departments. We are going to have to evaluate how to deal with it. I think there will be a good conclusion to this, but I'm not sure what it will be."

The crowd chanted "Bring on the Cats" as it anticipated the arrival of the second team in K-State history to go to a bowl game.

About 200 fans greeted the football team at about 7 p.m. Saturday at the Manhattan Municipal Airport after the Cats defeated Oklahoma State 21-17.

Coach Bill Snyder said both of the crowds, in Stillwater and in Manhattan, were wonderful as he signed autographs for his fans.

"We had a great turnout in Stillwater," Snyder said. "We have very special people that follow us, and we are grateful."

Chad May, K-State quarterback, who broke Lynn Dickey's record for single-season passing yardage and Big Eight junior-season passing yardage, said it is exciting to see the fans.

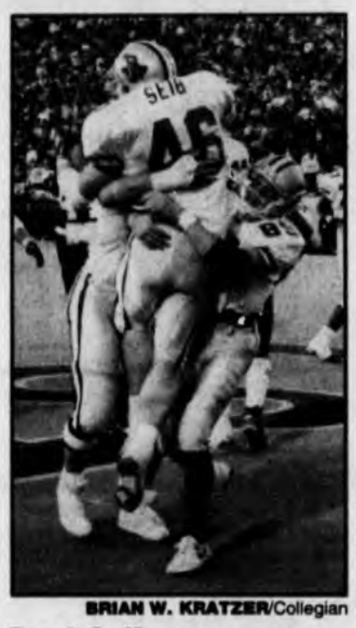
"This is great support," May said. "It's great to see 200 fans supporting us."

Jamie Mendez, free safety, said he also was impressed with the support.

"There was a great crowd at the game," Mendez said. "It can't get any better than this."

The hot topic among fans is what bowl game K-State will go to.

Jay Dibble, senior in management, said he is excited about the win and about getting a chance to go to a bowl game.



"This is the happiest day of my life," Dibble said. "The football team deserves our support."

Bret Koontz, junior in pre-veterinary medicine, said he and a friend spent an hour and a half at the airport to welcome the team home.

"They're my team because win or lose, I'm not a fair-weather fan and to let them know I'll back them all of the way," Koontz said. "If I was playing I would go to the Aloha, but if they would go to the Copper there will be more fan support."

Darren Doll, senior in business management, said he hopes the bowl board thinks of the students when it assigns the bowls.

"I hope they think about the students," Doll said. "If they go to the Aloha Bowl we can't go."

Assault victim in serious condition

WADE SISSON
Collegian

A 25-year-old K-State student who was assaulted near Ahearn Natatorium late Thursday night remains in serious condition, a nursing supervisor said Sunday.

Hai Huang, graduate student in regional and community planning, suffered a skull fracture and facial injuries sometime between 11:30 p.m. and midnight.

A roommate reported the incident after Huang walked to his residence at 1836 Anderson Ave.

Huang, international student from mainland China, was transported to Memorial Hospital. He was later transferred to St. Francis Hospital and Medical Center in Topeka, where he underwent surgery for skull injuries.

The victim was apparently leaving campus after studying in Seaton Hall when the assault took place, K-State Police Captain Charles Beckom said in a statement Friday.

Thursday's assault was the fourth such reported incident to occur on campus this semester.

The campus police investigator was unavailable for comment on the latest assault. A report will be filed by campus police, who have not been able to interview the victim.

Anyone who observed suspicious activity in the area is asked to contact campus police at 532-6412.

CAMPUS ASSAULTS

- On Sept. 6, a student was assaulted at 8:10 p.m. while walking west from B-3 behind Weber Hall.
- On Sept. 16, a student was assaulted at 10 p.m. while walking from Parking Lot B-2 to Haymaker Hall.
- On Nov. 6, a student was assaulted on the lawn in front of Anderson Hall.
- Anyone who observed suspicious activity in the area is asked to contact the campus police at 532-6412.

GTA arranges escort service for female students on campus

LISA STAAB
Collegian

Not only does Tony Barilla provide assistance in economics, he also assures safety for each student.

Barilla, graduate teaching assistant, said it is essential female students never leave an evening-review session without an escort.

"I do it because when I give a night-time review session, I want to make sure everyone gets home safely," Barilla said.

"They are coming to learn, not get attacked. Primarily, it is for the safety of the students, but is also for my own piece of mind," he said.

Chris Proctor, junior in accounting, said Barilla approached Sigma Alpha Epsilon last year to serve as escorts.

"I think it is a great program, and I'd encourage other faculty to take advantage of it," Proctor said. "We have a concern for safety on campus, but luckily we haven't had any big problems with rapes or attacks."

Annette Riedl, sophomore in journalism and mass communications, said Barilla's concern is positive and not sexist.

"I liked that he took the time to care about his students. He did it for safety, not to be negative," she said. "He made sure before leaving class that each female had an escort."

"All my guy friends tell me to be careful," Riedl said. "Until something bad happens to someone, no one understands the risks (of walking alone)."

Residents of Haymaker Hall serve as escorts for Barilla.

Barilla said he calls Haymaker a few hours before to schedule about 20 males to arrive after the session.

Chris Ediger, junior in mechanical engineering, said the escorts provide safety for the females.

"I think it's a good idea, and it shows he (Barilla) cares," Ediger said. "It's just too bad it has to be that way and that campus has become perceived as unsafe."

Barilla said one phone call is easy to make, and he encourages other staff to provide the same safety for students. He said it is only one precaution to ensure the safety of others.

CRASH KILLS 115 IN MACEDONIA

Rescue workers struggled Sunday to recover the charred remains of 115 people killed when their plane crashed in the rugged, snowy mountains of southwestern Macedonia.

Only one person aboard the Avioimpex charter flight survived the crash late Saturday night, officials said.

The plane, leased from the Russian carrier Aeroflot, was on a charter flight from Geneva to the Macedonian capital Skopje, but had to divert to Ohrid, 65 miles to the southwest, because of a blizzard at Skopje airport.

The pilot apparently lost control of the plane, despite good visibility and favorable landing conditions.

Topeka man kills friend accidentally

TOPEKA (AP) — An 18-year-old Topeka man is being held without bond following the accidental shooting of a close friend, Topeka police said.

Deanna Brown, 20, of Topeka, died after she was accidentally shot in the head late Friday.

Brown was Topeka's 23rd homicide victim and the 127th shooting victim this year. Previously, the city's record number of homicides was 17, set in 1991.

Police said Brown and several friends were in a kitchen when the 18-year-old began playing with a gun, pointing it and pulling the trigger several times.

When he pointed the gun at Brown, it discharged. She was declared dead at the scene.

The man later turned himself in to police and handed over a snub-nose revolver. He is being detained in the Shawnee County Jail in connection with involuntary manslaughter.

Local governments not regulating cable

WASHINGTON (AP) — Cable TV subscribers in some cities could have a tough time fighting high cable rates because local authorities are not taking steps to enforce a new federal law.

Under the law, local governments are responsible for making sure rates for basic cable service are in line with formulas devised by the Federal Communications Commission.

But many small communities view it as just one more federal regulation that they are expected to enforce without getting any extra funding to do so.

Some local governments also object to the new regulations on the grounds that they have good relationships with their local cable operators and receive few complaints about cable service.

To gain the authority to enforce the law, a local government must file a one-page form with the FCC to certify that the cable company in the community is a monopoly that qualifies for regulation.

Once the certification is granted, the local authority asks the cable company to produce its rate card for review.

Indian forces kill nine Muslim militants

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — Indian security forces shot and killed nine suspected Muslim militants in Kashmir in two separate incidents Sunday, news reports said. Two Indian soldiers were also killed.

Press Trust and United News of India said six separatists and one Indian soldier were killed during a gunbattle in the Batmaloo area of India-held Kashmir.

Three militants and one soldier were killed in another incident in the area of Baramullah, also in Kashmir.

About 5,000 Kashmiris marched in Srinagar late Saturday to protest the death of a suspected militant who had been taken into custody by Indian troops.

Indian officials said Mehraj-Ud-Din was killed during an armed encounter, but his family and residents said he may have died under torture during interrogation. There was no independent confirmation.

Muslim militants are waging a violent campaign for an independent homeland in Kashmir, a Muslim-majority state in mostly Hindu India. At least 1,680 people have died in the violence this year.

U.N. lifts suspension of aid to Bosnia

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina (AP) — Peacekeepers and relief officials worked feverishly Sunday so aid convoys to snow-covered central Bosnia could resume in a day or two after being halted for nearly a month.

But some important supply routes remained closed.

Aid convoys to central Bosnia were suspended Oct. 26, after a Danish truck driver was killed by gunfire blamed on Bosnian government troops.

The U.N. has decided to lift the suspension, and Cmdr. Idesbald van Biesebroeck, a peacekeeper representative, said the first convoys could move as early as Monday.

However, Lt. Col. Bill Aikman, another representative, said two key supply routes in central Bosnia remained closed by Bosnian Croat militia:

He also said Serb soldiers at a checkpoint outside Sarajevo held up a relief convoy for hours Saturday night as it returned from delivering supplies to a hospital in Pazaric, 12 miles southwest of the capital.

Despite U.N. efforts, the prospect of more aid convoys did not appear to stem the fighting.

Bosnian radio said two people, one of them a 12-year-old girl, were killed by shelling and sniping in Mostar.

New policies for Union events passed by UAB

KIMBERLY HEFLING
Collegian

The University Activities Board Wednesday passed a policy concerning on-campus events coordinated by UAB-registered organizations.

The policy provides rules for on-campus events.

"The policy ensures that rules and regulations for events are the same for everybody," Amy Smith, UAB chairperson, said.

Any event that is social and participative in nature, highly controversial or involving a high-profile figure will be required to use the policy beginning in Spring 1994.

"All events won't be affected. If you want to just reserve a room, no. If you want to have Pat Robertson speak, yes," Smith said.

The policy states that an event coordinator, designated by the organization, is responsible for event-related details leading to, during and through a post-event evaluation to ensure the safe and successful production of an on-campus event.

After reserving a facility for an event, a facility representative will provide the student with an agreement form. The facilities representative will then decide whether a preliminary meeting is necessary. If it is not necessary, the event agreement form will be filled out at that time.

If a preliminary meeting is necessary, it must take place three weeks before the event. At the meeting, a facilities representative, the student event coordinator, the group's adviser or designate, a campus police representative and others deemed necessary will be present.

During the meeting an event agreement form will be completed by the organization. This agreement must be filed with the UAB two weeks prior to the event.

The two types of events covered by this policy are open, publicized events and closed, unpublicized events.

Open, publicized events involve participation from University and non-University persons. A full-time police officer and at least four party-patrol members may be required at the event. This will be determined by the facilities manager or during the preliminary meeting.

The party patrol is a group of students, composed of at least two males and two females, not necessarily associated with the sponsoring group. They are responsible for checking the door, and monitoring and disbanding the group.

NEW EVENT POLICY
■ An event coordinator will be responsible for evaluating the event.

Closed, unpublicized events are events that involve participation from University persons. Non-University people must be on a guest list submitted no later than 5 p.m. the day before the event.

The student coordinator is responsible for monitoring the guests at the door. These events may require at least four party-patrol members, a member of the organization sponsoring the event at the door and contact campus police to have an on-duty officer to monitor the event and to assist with disbanding if necessary.

Smith said the policy may sound confusing, but that the students were kept in mind when planning the policy.

"We tried to make it as easy as possible for students," she said.

At the scene

Riley County Police Officer Rodney Cook investigates a Yamaha Razz Sunday afternoon at the corner of Anderson and Denison avenues. A two-vehicle accident occurred at the intersection around 4 p.m.

The driver of the car, Patrick Paulsen, 1841 Alabama Lane, was heading east on Anderson and attempted to turn north on to Denison Ave. on a yellow light when he struck the scooter, driven by Patrick Kellye, 1704 Fairlane Apt. 14. Kelley was going west on Anderson. Kelley was transported for minor scrapes and abrasions.

Damage in the accident was over $500.

"The person who was on the right of the scooter was stopped," said Avelina Paulsen, a passenger in the vehicle.

African culture shines in music, food, skits

JILL PARADISE
Collegian

K-State students, faculty and members of the Manhattan community celebrated African Music Night last Saturday.

"The purpose of this evening is to bring the African culture closer to the Manhattan community," said Kouassi Kouakou, president of the International Coordinating Council and graduate student in grain science.

The African continent contains more square miles than China, United States, India, Europe, Argentina and New Zealand combined, according to the 1990 World Almanac. There are 52 countries in Africa, each with many cultures.

"We come from different ethnic groups, and each of them has its own culture," said Philomina Gwanfogbe, president of the African Student Union and graduate student in foods and nutrition.

The theme for the evening was diversity of diversities in unity.

"Diversity of any kind is such an immense blessing that it enriches peoples lives and must be celebrated," Gwanfogbe said.

Many people from different ethnicities other than African attended African Music Night.

Ana Rocha-Garza, graduate student in food science from Mexico, was invited to the evening by Gwanfogbe. She said she liked the evening.

"Getting in a university, you don't only learn things that are taught in the classroom. You share your culture and learn from others. I think this is a great opportunity to meet people from all over the world," Rocha-Garza said.

African snacks were served before the performances. Some of the snacks included were samosa, ground beef, spices and mixed vegetables wrapped in an egg roll and mahamri, flour, coconut milk and sugar, deep fried like a donut.

All of the performers were either K-State students or their children. The evening opened with a welcome song. The remainder of the evening featured traditional African music, dancing and skits portraying life in Africa, as well as African pop music.

EDITORIAL

Thirty years later, we are reminded of who Kennedy was

Today it is 30 years.

Thirty years since the bullet of an assassin(s) took the life of someone whom many consider to be the brightest beacon to ever shine in the American political lighthouse.

We of course speak of John Fitzgerald Kennedy, the 35th president of the United States. Kennedy was shot as his motorcade passed through the streets of Dallas that day in November.

In the time since, he and his death have become the stuff of legend.

Movies have been made, experts have waxed over a multitude of conspiracies, and more books and stories have been written than the average person could read in his or her lifetime.

But for today, we as a nation should rise above all this academia and ponder for a moment what JFK really represented.

He represented unity. Granted, his presidential win was the narrowest in U.S. history. And in that narrow margin he found a way to make Americans be proud of themselves and have a common cause — to make the world a better place for all.

In his administration was born the race for the moon, which America would win. With this victory tucked securely away, no other nation has set foot on our distant satellite.

He represented vigor. After so many years of old men in the White House, America became enamored with the idea of a young man leading the nation. One who had real children and a reason to be concerned about their future, just as we fretted over the future of our children.

Most students on this campus were not even alive on that day in Dallas 30 years ago. We know of this man through legend and writing, television and parents.

And many of us get the sense that we missed something. That we missed the time when government was a good thing and could be trusted. For many of us, bitterness has replaced trust.

But today, we can all take a moment and think about a time when one man instilled an idea in everyone. The idea that when a country acted as a singular entity, there was seemingly nothing it couldn't accomplish.

Landon Lecture gives us chance to reflect on our common humanity

Editor,

Upon our return from the Turkey Day break, we will all have the opportunity to attend the Rev. Jesse Jackson's Landon Lecture address Monday, Nov. 29 in Bramlage Coliseum.

Since the Reverend Jackson is the president of the National Rainbow Coalition it would seem fitting if those of us who wore Rainbow Ribbons during our Racial/Ethnic Harmony Week put them back on for this occasion.

The Rainbow Ribbon symbolizes the diverse ways we are defined as human beings, ethnically, racially, spiritually and sexually. The circular shape of the Rainbow Ribbon suggests that we are all connected in the family of humans as we strive to find ways to live more harmoniously.

I hope everyone will dig out their ribbons and wear them for the Jesse Jackson Landon Lecture. Many of you have more than one; please share the extras with friends.

▶ PLAY REVIEW

Review of 'Gathering' lacking in essentials of what makes a play work

Editor,

J.R. Prather's alleged "review" of KSU Theater's "A Gathering of Fools" was nothing of the kind. It was, in fact, little more than a half-hearted synopsis of the play's plot, which did a great disservice to the many hard-working artists and technicians connected with the production. It was also an inept and misleading article that in almost no satisfactory way gave an accurate picture of the quality of the production.

A review for any live production should address elements that go well beyond a simple-minded description of what happens within the story. Production aspects such as costumes, lighting, set design, sound and acting should all receive at least a modicum of examination and mention in a reviewer's article.

The only one of these production aspects Prather even bothered with was the acting in "A Gathering of Fools," as her review included the innocuous observation that "the play seemed to work best when (Lady Macbeth and Lady Macduff) were on stage together." This observation is hardly a revelation, considering that they are the lead characters of the play. Such observation as this, as well as every other phrase in Prather's article, could have been set down in print without her ever having seen the show.

This brings me to my next point, which is to report that a fellow cast member told me he spoke to Prather after the "review" appeared in the Collegian and she confided to him that she did not see the entire show. This brings up an interesting question: Exactly how much of "Fools" did she see? Three quarters? Half? The opening scene? To me, this would seem a rather large breach of journalistic standards. How does one review what one has not seen? Why should any reader give credence to a reviewer who bases her conclusions on what she happens to catch before departing at intermission to meet a deadline?

Prather closed her rather shallow article by observing that the play had no discernible theme. I dare say that, based on this statement, she simply isn't very discerning. Among several strong messages Charlotte MacFarland's script has to offer is this: Actions always have consequences. With the acquisition of power comes responsibility, to others as well as to oneself. These are messages Prather might do well to take notice of.

KSU Theater's production of "A Gathering of Fools" is one of eight finalists to represent this region of the Midwest in the American College Theatre Festival. Another of the eight finalists is KSU's staging of "Colorado Catechism," and to have two such productions come from the same school is far from an everyday occurrence. K-State theater is the second graduate program I've been involved with after doing undergraduate theater work at two other colleges, and I can tell you that the quality of the plays staged here is as good or better than any I've seen elsewhere.

The theater program and the plays performed at K-State are of the highest artistic caliber, and I for one am damn proud to be part of both. Such high standards and dedication to craft deserve closer attention from a prize-winning newspaper like the Collegian than the printing of a decidedly inferior-quality review.

No suggestion made to funnel McCain funding through music dept.

Editor,

I am misstated in the account of Thursday's Fine Arts Council meeting that appeared in Friday's Collegian. McCain Auditorium is definitely one of the programs funded by the fine arts fee, as the pie chart accompanying the story clearly shows. I did not propose that McCain's funding be channeled through the music department. To my knowledge, no one else did either. That idea was not even broached in the council's deliberations.

As to events doing well or poorly, my point was that for programs like those presented by McCain, an arts administrator, of whom I am one, and not a committee, typically bears responsibility. Input from students and other constituencies McCain serves, whether through a committee or other structures, has always been integral to the philosophy that guides McCain's programming.

▶ LANGUAGE

If we are learning their language, then immigrants shoud learn ours

Editor,

This is in response to Lola Shrimplin's column titled "Perils of limited foreign-language skills" in the Nov. 19 Collegian. I believe that while she made a worthwhile point, she has failed to address another.

First of all, I have had four years of Spanish instruction, and I agree that learning a new language is at times a difficult challenge. But I do not believe that immigrants or foreign students should expect us to learn their language in order to communicate with us. I would not expect that when my husband and I are stationed in Panama that the citizens of that country will be fluent in English. They will feel that I am an "outsider," and I should learn Spanish if I expect to communicate with them.

Therefore, I believe that immigrants should also make an attempt to learn English and possess the ability to communicate with us.

If they wish to become an American citizen they should be able to speak the language of this country. I am not against diversity or against the retention of their national language, but I strongly believe that in a country where English is the language they should attempt to learn it.

Perhaps they would discover that it is a difficult, yet rewarding challenge just as I have found in my Spanish studies.

▶ MULTICULTURALISM

Forcing multicultural class on students won't promote diversity

Editor,

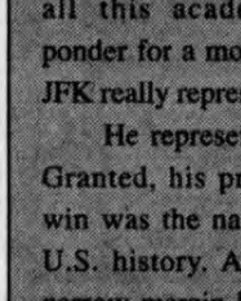
I recently attended the forum that discussed the possible requirement to take a multicultural class as an international overlay. I believe that this is absolutely ludicrous and that the decision to take a multicultural class should be the sole decision of the student.

Why should an American student be required to take a multicultural course when a plethora of people from various ethnic backgrounds fail to learn one of the most important aspects of American culture — speaking English?



I also believe that students truly wouldn't learn anything from sitting in a class and reading a book about various cultures. If a student is to get the true meaning of a culture, he or she needs to have actual, physical contact with the culture, or learning of the ethnic background will never take place.

For example, I have received A's in Spanish I and II, am taking Spanish III and can hold a decent conversation in Spanish. But if I were to travel to Argentina tomorrow, I most likely wouldn't have the slightest idea what language they would be speaking. Each country would have different pronunciations of words and different slang terms. No class can tell me how people speak Spanish in Spain, Argentina or south-central Los Angeles, for that matter. I would have to listen first-hand from actual citizens of those countries/cities in their natural surroundings.

The student needs to take the initiative to learn the cultures of various ethnic backgrounds. If the student does not make the effort to enter the real world and become multicultural, then that is the student's decision. However, I believe that it would be to the advantage of the student to learn about various ethnic backgrounds, but I am firmly against the University making this course a requirement. Multiculturalism isn't something learned from a book; it is learned through the relationships with people of different backgrounds.

Liberals fearful of competition, conservatism

JOHN HART

Liberalism makes its greatest strides in the absence of competition.

Liberals continue to pay lip service to the idea of free and open debate. Yet, when a sacred doctrine of liberal orthodoxy is profaned their response is to avoid a fight by censoring their opponents into oblivion.

In one example, Congress is attempting to resurrect the Fairness Doctrine, a relic of the Kennedy administration, which Ronald Reagan appropriately dismantled. The Fairness Doctrine would have one purpose, as it did during the Kennedy years: Censor conservative opinion. Conservative talk-show host Rush Limbaugh is the current target of attack.

The Fairness Doctrine would require broadcasters to give equal time to both sides of an issue. This sounds nice and fair in theory, as the title Fairness Doctrine would suggest. Yet once again, the glossy rhetoric of liberalism fails to hide its totalitarian motives. The doctrine would create such tremendous complications for stations that they would likely eliminate all controversial programs, like Limbaugh's, instead of trying to comply with the order to give equal time to the other side.

The presence of the liberal perspective on radio and television should be dictated by the quality of the program, its ability to articulate liberal ideas, and its ability to recruit advertisers. Supporters of the Fairness Doctrine in Congress disagree. They oppose free-market principles in the mass media and instead want the state to dictate the terms of free expression.

On another battlefield, Ted Kennedy (D-Mass.) and the ACLU are sponsoring the federal Clinic Access Bill in which they hope to create a protest-free zone around abortion clinics. The bill would not restrict the free-speech rights of all demonstrators (AIDS activists, anti-war protesters, pro-choice activists, etc.) but would isolate and discriminate specifically against pro-life demonstrators. Remember, it is the pro-life movement that has defamed liberalism.

Schools are another arena where liberal censorship is common.

A study conducted by the National Institute for Education of popular elementary school social studies texts found that "religion, traditional values and conservative political and economic positions have been reliably excluded." In August, a Planned Parenthood employee managed to have an abstinence curriculum removed from high schools in Modesto, Calif., that was contrary to the liberal "safe-sex" orthodoxy.

Last spring, at the University of Pennsylvania, nine black students nearly destroyed an entire issue of the campus newspaper in a militant effort to censor the opinions of a conservative columnist who was critical of affirmative action. The school's administration offered tacit approval to the censorship by deciding not to discipline the guilty party.

Also last spring, in a similar instance here at K-State, several students or student stole a pro-life banner from the trees between Farrell and Lafene without a single cry of censorship from the left.

The absence of liberal criticism to these acts of censorship demonstrate that liberals are content with embracing the tactics they once abhorred. They either don't see the double standard or are comfortable with maintaining it.

This rise in liberal censorship most clearly shows that liberals are afraid to be challenged. With an ideology that has failed around the world, played a key role in the destruction of our moral environment, and its advance by hollow rhetoric, it's not surprising that supporters fear for its survival.

There is perhaps no greater threat to the survival of any idea than free, open and honest debate.

Friends win College Bowl

Friendship gives group unity needed to win competition

ANGELA YOUNG
Collegian

Fourteen teams were given the chance to test their knowledge at the Union Program Council's College Bowl on Saturday and Sunday.

The College Bowl determines which team will represent K-State at the regionals in late February.

The winning team was called Mostly Harmless. Those who are part of team were Carrick Williams, senior in psychology and political science; Wesley Twombly, senior in agricultural engineering and feed science; Camilla Forshay, senior in psychology and French; and Team Captain Paul Hough, senior in architectural engineering.

The same team has won for three years in a row and placed third at the regional competition last year. The members of Mostly Harmless met while living in Goodnow Hall and now share a house together.

"We like each other, so we work well together. We have a wide variety of interests, and our majors aren't our only areas of interest," Williams said.

Forshay said their friendship has been a large part of their success.

"Friendship is a good thing because there is no competition against each other and we know each others' strengths," she said.

The College Bowl is a double-elimination tournament, with each round lasting 14 minutes. The question topics range from Winston Churchill to Richard Pryor. The event was sponsored by the UPC Issues and Ideas Committee, and all participants received a T-shirt.

Committee Chairman Brent Coverdale, junior in political science, said the event attracted teams from various living groups and organizations because of the chance to represent K-State at regionals and to have fun.

"It's just kind of a fun way to practice what you know. I think it's kind of the same reason that Trivial Pursuit was so popular. It's fun to see how much information you can spew out in a short amount of time," Coverdale said.

This year's regional College Bowl contest will be at K-State.

"Thirty teams will be coming from a five-state area," Jeff Strater, UPC program adviser, said,"They range all the way from community colleges all the way up to big four-year universities."

Winners of the regional contest then move on to nationals.

The members of Mostly Harmless said they will continue to practice by watching "Jeopardy!" and playing Trivial Pursuit.

"We really love competing, and it's great that we are going on to the next level," Forshay said

Williston Geology Club adopts spillway for clean-up effort

DANI JOHNSTON
Collegian

Highways are not the only areas where people pollute and litter the environment.

The Williston Geology Club is adopting the Tuttle Creek Spillway for a clean-up project.

"It's like an 'Adopt a Highway' project, but instead we're adopting a spillway," Jim Schneider, senior in geology and president of the club, said.

"So many people go out there and trash it," Schneider said. "It draws attention to geology and our department."

One reason for the clean-up is to present a better impression for visiting professors.

"A lot of professors come from other schools to do research, and the spillway is a reflection on our geology department," Schneider said.

The project is the idea of Amy Nowatzke, vice president of the club, Schneider said.

"We just needed to get a permit, and we just got the papers back from the corps of engineers," Schneider said.

He said it took two weeks to get the permit. Clean-up of the spillway is to begin as soon as possible.

"We're trying to get one clean-up in this semester before it gets cold. If not this weekend, then as soon as possible," Schneider said.

There are 25 people in the club, and everyone will participate in the clean-up, Schneider said.

The club also has an 'Adopt a Highway' project. Their highway is Fort Riley Boulevard.

"We've had it about one year now, and we go out three times a year to clean," Schneider said.

The last time the club cleaned the highway was in September.

"We go and clean up papers, cans or whatever is out there," Tony Maddix, senior in geology and member of the club, said.

"We haven't had that stretch of highway for very long. It was last spring when they said we could have it," he said.

STILLWATER, Okla. — One memorable drive for one memorable season.

K-State quarterback Chad May directed a six-play, 80-yard scoring drive with only 58 seconds left in the game for a 21-17 come-from-behind win Saturday against Oklahoma State.

The Wildcats started their march with no time outs and down 17-14 to the Cowboys, but ended it with May's two-yard touchdown pass to a wide-open Brad Seib with 21 seconds remaining for the victory.

"I've been coaching for a long time," Coach Bill Snyder said.

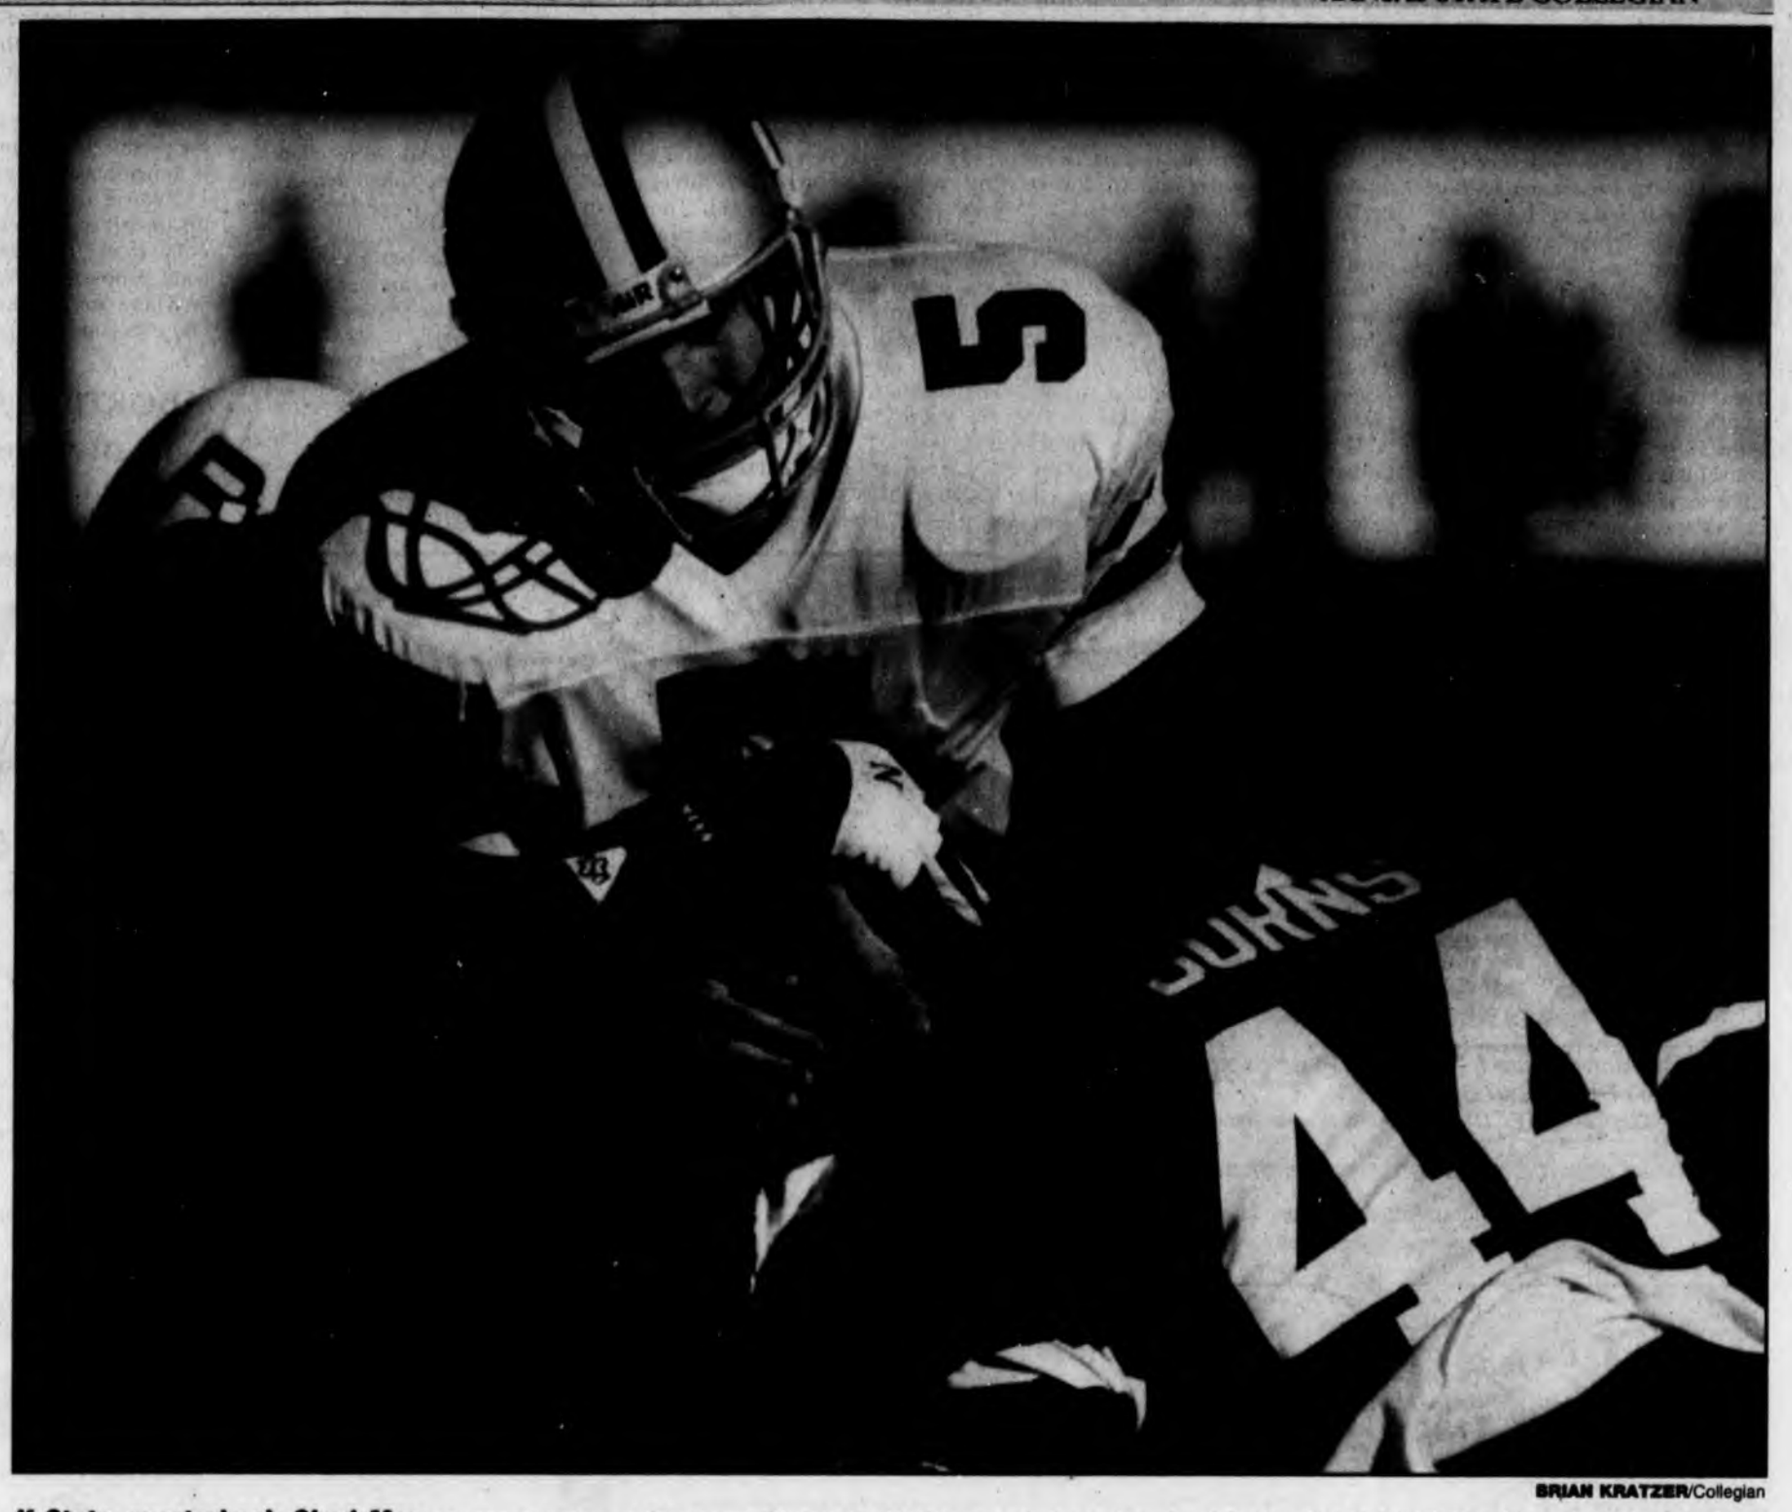
"And I've been around a lot of great quarterbacks. And I've seen a lot of come-from-behind victories. But none matches the one that Chad engineered today. I thought he was super. I thought our receivers and offensive line was super."

The Cats' victory erased a 61-year drought without eight wins, moving them to 8-2-1 and into third place in the Big Eight Conference, which would put them in line for an Aloha Bowl appearance Dec. 25.

K-State's 8-2-1 record is its best since the 1932 team established an 8-2 mark.

"I'm happy with the way the season went," May said. "There was a couple of games that could have gone either way. We could have finished the season 10-1-1. But we are going to a bowl game and finish 9-2-1 for the best season at K-State."

May said he directed a similar drive in his tenure at Cal-State Fullerton. He drove that unit 82 yards in 1:18 to beat Long Beach State 37-36.



"I had confidence in myself and in the team," May said of his second game-winning drive. "I wasn't going to quit or give up. I knew we had some arsenal. I was just worried that we didn't have any time outs. I thought it was great with the time we had."

Oklahoma State tied the game with 8:07 left in the fourth quarter on one of the wilder plays of the game.

Quarterback Toné Jones pitched the ball to tailback Darly Johnson on second and goal from the Cats' eight-yard line in what seemed to be a sweep play. But Johnson dropped back to pass the ball, avoiding numerous K-State tacklers in a mad scramble, and found Rafael Denson for a touchdown.

Denson caught the ball around the two-yard line and jumped in the end zone for the score. K-State cornerback Kenny McEntyre missed the tackle on Denson, who caught four passes for 48 yards.

"I just missed the tackle," McEntyre said. "When he started scrambling, I lost my receiver. I didn't think No. 23 was going to throw it, and I was breaking toward the ball."

K-State quarterback Chad May squeezes between Oklahoma State's Keith Burns and Jevon Langford during the Cats' 21-17 win against the Cowboys Saturday in Stillwater. May engineered the Cats' game-winning drive in the last 58 seconds of the fourth quarter for the victory.

Then, with 58 seconds left in the game, Lawson Vaughn kicked a 43-yard field goal to give the Cowboys a 17-14 lead.

"We didn't play near as well defensively in the second half as we did in the first half," said Snyder, whose Cats had a 14-0 lead early in the second quarter. "We were just having trouble getting some things stopped. We just had trouble putting the brakes on. And that is a credit to Oklahoma State. They executed very well.

"We did that thing that we have done too often. We played to the level of competition. That's not at all to downgrade Oklahoma State. We have kept ballgames close for the most part."

> "We've got to add some drama to it for some reason. I'm happy with the way it turned out, though"
>
> ANDRE COLEMAN
> WIDE RECEIVER

Oklahoma State coach Pat Jones, whose team dropped to 3-8 overall and 0-7 in the league, said the Cowboys didn't make the plays to assure the win.

"You've got to give Bill and them credit, but there is no mystery to being able to go make a play. They did a better job of executing than we did, and we couldn't make a play. But that's not the first time I've seen that this season."

K-State's defense stacked up on the opening possession of the game, forcing Oklahoma State to punt after three plays.

The Cats' offensive unit wasted no time in rewarding the defense, driving 46 yards in 4:27 for the game's first touchdown. May took the ball in from the seven-yard line on an option, giving the Cats a 7-0 lead.

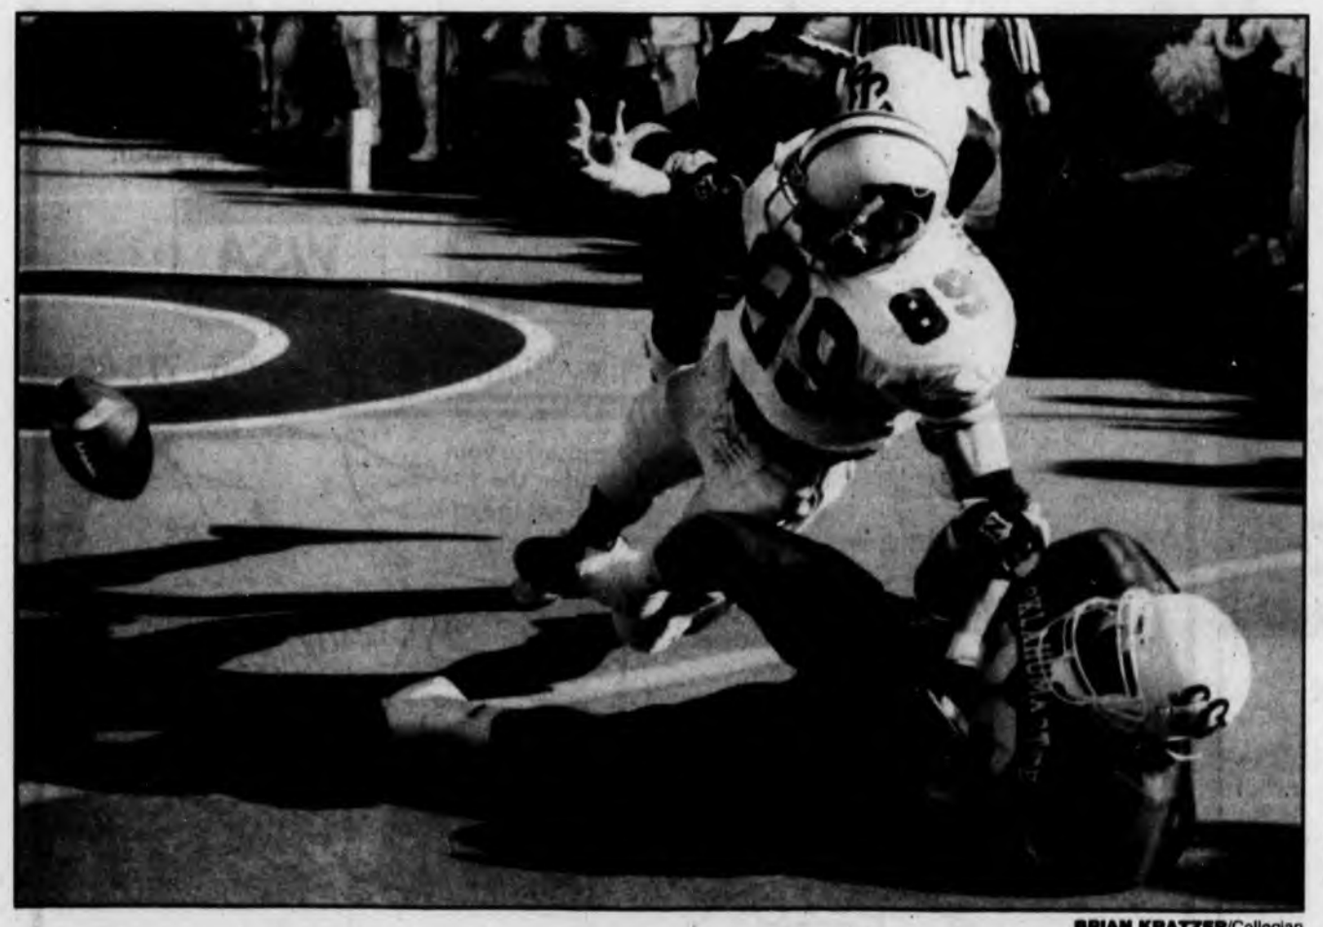
K-State jumped to a 14-0 lead in the second stanza, with J.J. Smith being the beneficiary of an option pitch from May for a three-yard touchdown run.

Smith finished the game with a game-high 79 yards on 19 carries and one touchdown.

Cornerback Thomas Randolph set up the Cats' second scoring campaign with an interception off Jones. Jones floated the ball to wide receiver Fred Thomas, who was only able to tip the ball in the air, and Thomas dove for the interception.

The Cowboys cut the lead to seven with 1:37 left in the half, after David Thompson bobbled a pitch from Jones, but regained control in time for the touchdown.

The five-play, 17-yard scoring drive was initialized when May fumbled the ball on third and five from the Cats' 25-yard line. Defensive end Jason Gildon caused the fumble, and linebacker Richie Ansely recovered it.



Both teams went scoreless in the third quarter before Oklahoma State scored 10 consecutive points to take the lead in the fourth. K-State followed with the game-winning drive in the final minute of the game.

"We have to be the unluckiest team in the country," Oklahoma State punter Scott Tyner said.

K-State wide receiver Andre Coleman said the Cats tend to end their games melodramatically.

"We've got to add some drama to it for some reason," he said.

"I'm happy with the way it turned out, though."

STILLWATER, Okla. — The final minute of K-State's 21-17 victory against Oklahoma State won't be forgotten.

When Lawson Vaughn kicked a 43-yard field goal with 58 seconds left to give the Cowboys a 17-14 lead, hopes of a Wildcat victory seemed nearly impossible.

Cornerback Kenny McEntyre said he felt disappointed.

"We let the team down, especially the offense," McEntyre said, "but we knew the offense would score."

The six-play, 80-yard drive started when quarterback Chad May threw an incompletion, followed by an illegal-motion penalty on the Cats.

Facing second down and 15 yards at the K-State 15-yard line, May connected with wide receiver Kevin Lockett, who stepped out of bounds at the Cats' 33 yard-line.

After another illegal motion by K-State, May hit wide receiver Andre Coleman for 26 yards. Coleman was shoved out of bounds at the Cowboys' 48-yard line with 38 seconds left in the game.

Lockett got a hold of another pass from May on the next play, good for 26 yards at the Cowboys' 22-yard line with 31 seconds left.

Lockett said he knew they could score the touchdown.

"We had a lot of confidence," said Lockett, who caught eight passes for 108 yards in the game. "We work on the two-minute drill in practice all the time."

Free safety Jaime Mendez said the offense would get a touchdown.

"It shows we have a ton of confidence," Mendez said. "With Chad, we always have a chance. I feel Chad would pull something out of his bag of tricks.

"I've seen him run the two-minute in practice, and he does it well."

Wide receiver Mitch Running got into the act when he caught a 5-yard pass from May on the next play as he stepped out of bounds at the 17-yard line with 27 seconds left in the game.

After another incompletion, May threw to Coleman running deep in the end zone. Coleman stopped but was interfered with by cornerback Cleavon Williams before he had the chance to catch the ball.

The officials called defensive pass interference on Williams, which resulted in a 15-yard penalty and moved the ball to Oklahoma State's 2-yard line.

Actually, Coleman said he was close to making the game-winning grab anyway.

"I was very close," said Coleman, who finished with five catches for 77 yards.

Runners to represent K-State at nationals

WESS HUDELSON
Collegian

Four runners are representing K-State in Bethlehem, Pa., at Lehigh University today in the NCAA Cross Country Championships.

"I'm very proud of all the qualifiers," Coach Terry Drake said. "They knew what they had to do to go to nationals and took care of the task at hand."

Paulette Staats, Jeanene Rugan, Ryan Clive-Smith and Francis O'Neill all will be competing in the championships.

Staats said she hopes to improve from last year's performance, where she finished 61st.

Judging from her performance so far this season, her hopes could come true. She has defeated 8 of 10 competitors who finished in the top 50 in the 1992 national meet.

"I'm very excited for Paulette Staats," Drake said. "She is proving just how good of a runner she really is."

O'Neill returns to the championships as a result of his sixth-place finish in the District V Championships Nov. 13. He finished 38th in the 1992 championships and earned all-America honors.

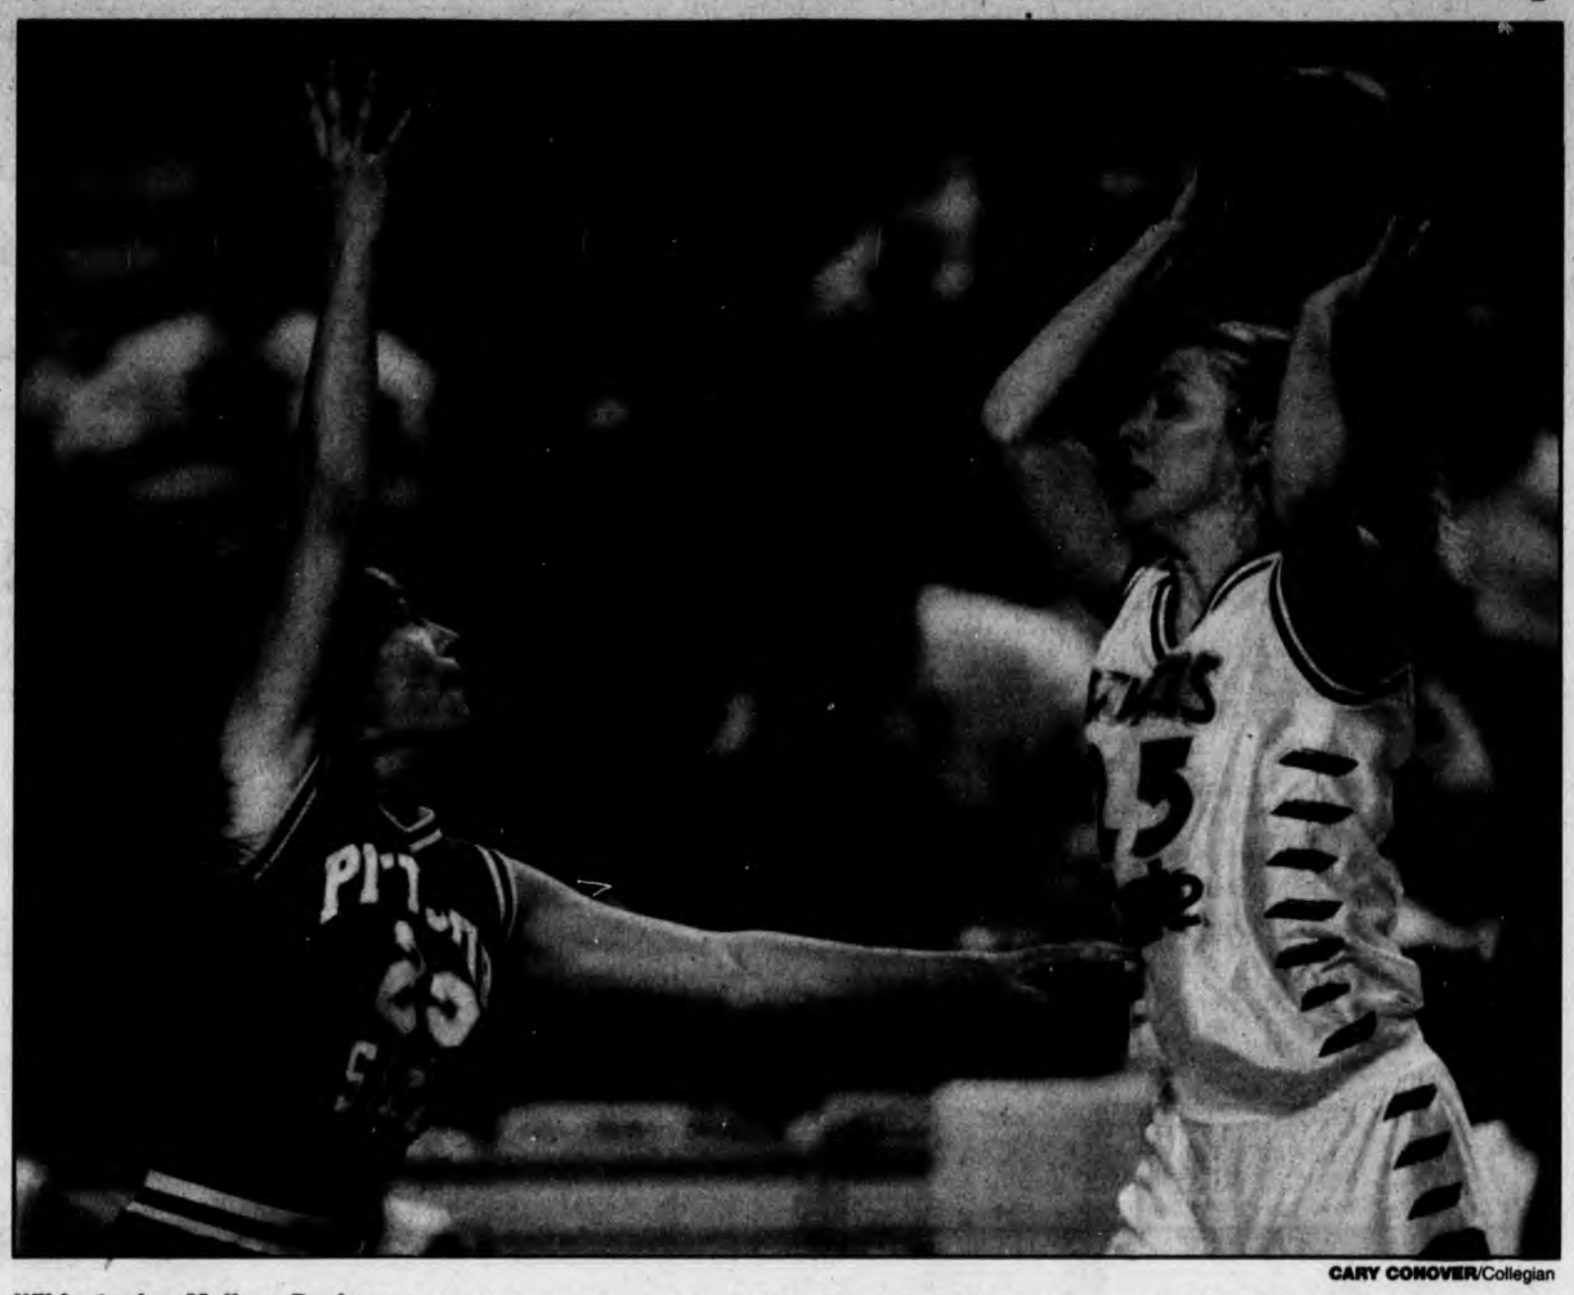
"I really believe I can finish higher," O'Neill said. "If I just run a smarter race, I feel I can finish in the top 20 runners."

Leading the way for K-State is sophomore Ryan Clive-Smith. Clive-Smith finished fourth in the district race with a 10,000- meter time of 31:53.5.

"I just decided to go out hard from the start," Clive-Smith said. "I knew I could be with the front runners, if I went out hard."

Clive-Smith finished 17th at the Big Eight Championships and has shown steady improvement throughout the season, Drake said.

"Ryan Clive-Smith ran the race of his life, and Francis O'Neill had a solid race," Drake said. "Francis still feels like he's coming on after being sick."



Perhaps the toughest road taken to nationals was taken by Jeanene Rugan. Rugan qualified for the meet through an at-large bid.

At the seven district meets in the nation, the top two teams qualify their entire squads. The next three best individuals then qualify by themselves.

After all of the results are collected, four more individuals are given at-large bids to the national meet based on their place and time at the district meet.

Rugan was not aware she had qualified for the national meet until Monday, Nov. 15, two days after the District V Championships.

"Coach Drake thought I had a good shot of getting in, but I was stili pretty nervous all day Sunday," Rugan said.

The K-State women's basketball team opened the season with a 62-38 loss to the Auckland Basketball Club in an exhibition game in Bramlage Coliseum Sunday night.

Auckland was led by guard Maria Noon, who had 25 points with four three-pointers.

The Wildcats leading scorer was Shanele Stires, who netted nine points.

For the game, the Cats shot only 23.5 percent from the field, including 4-20 from 3-point range. The Kiwis shot 52.3 percent for the game, and they shot 45 percent from beyond the three-point arc.

"We were surprised to be so open at times," Stires said.

"I'm used to shooting over people, and I was so wide open that I didn't know what to do. I guess there was a lid over the basket tonight."

K-State coach Brian Agler said the game allowed the Cats to find their weak points.

"Thank god for exhibition games," Agler said.

"I don't think that we came ready to play tonight, and it showed. I wanted to find out what we would look like in a game, and I got to look at the players that I wanted to tonight. We got our weak points exposed tonight.

"On defense we only played for about 15 to 20 seconds, and we need to play the whole time they have the ball. We better make quite a bit of improvement before the next game."

Auckland jumped right out of the gate in the first half when Leanne Walker and Noon hit consecutive three-pointers to give the Kiwis a 6-0 lead.

"It got away really quick," K-State wing Shawnda DeCamp said. "I didn't realize that we were down by so many that quickly."

The Kiwis expanded their lead to 23-8 on a bank shot by center Vicki Cunningham. The Auckland team then went on a 5-0 run to put them up by 17 points, and they held a 35-19 advantage at halftime.

"We improved, and we did some things really well," Auckland coach Ann Robertson said. "We started to mold as a team tonight."

In the early stages of the second half the Kiwis started right where they left off in the opening period, by scoring nine straight points to give them a 25-point advantage.

The Cats came back and scored six straight points on a three-pointer by DeCamp, a 15-foot jump shot by Dana Pollock and a free throw by Stires, slicing the Kiwi's lead to 54-35.

That was the closest the Cats got, as Auckland then rebuilt their lead and eventually won 62-38.

Agler said the Cats need to be more consistent on the offensive side of the ball.

"We need to attack the inside better," Agler said.

"We were playing not to turn the ball over, instead of attacking. We didn't handle the post-play well at all."

DeCamp said tonight's play showed that the team needed to improve.

"We weren't moving around well tonight on the offensive side of the ball," DeCamp said.

"It pinpoints what we need to do."

Stires had 11 rebounds to lead the team, and Kjersten Larson led the Cats with four assists. Lynn Holzman also had two steals for the Cats.

Bears run past Chiefs

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Neal Anderson's 1-yard touchdown with 3:09 left made the Chicago Bears 19-17 winners over the Kansas City Chiefs team that hadn't lost at home since Oct. 25, 1992.

The Chiefs (7-3) had stopped a Chicago threat on Albert Lewis' interception on the 2.

A moment later Dave Krieg, standing in the end zone, threw a low pass to Hayes that popped right into Lincoln's hands.

The AFC West-leading Chiefs had taken a 17-12 lead on Nick Lowery's 20-yard field goal late in the third quarter and seemed in control much of the day despite their inability to stop Chicago's running game.

Kevin Butler hit field goals of 32 and 45 yards later in the second quarter to slice the Chiefs' halftime lead to 14-6.

The Bears, who have struggled offensively all season, got the ball at the 50 midway through the fourth quarter, trailing only by five.

But Dan Saleaumua sacked Harbaugh for a big loss; Derrick Thomas threw Anderson for a 5-yard loss, and Chicago then got only six yards on third-and-17.

The Bears rushed for 190 yards, led by Harbaugh's 61 yards.

"They ran the ball up and down Arrowhead against us, and it's embarrassing as hell," said Chiefs coach Marty Schottenheimer.

CHIEFS ROUNDUP

- Marcus Allen, becoming the ninth man in NFL history to rush for more than 9,000 yards, scored two touchdowns as the Chiefs seized a 14-0 lead with 10:52 left in the first half.
- Neal Anderson's touchdown with 3:09 left lifted the Bears to a 19-17 win over the Chiefs, who hadn't lost at home since Oct. 25, 1992.

Cowboys' defense collapses during Cats' final drive

"Actually, he had my right hand, and I cradled it with my left hand. When I hit the ground, it squirted out. At first, I thought the referee was going to give the touchdown to me. But he made the right call."

Coleman said Williams, the defensive back on the coverage, probably interfered out of desperation.

"He was beat," Coleman said.

"If he wouldn't have grabbed me, it would have been an easy catch."

On the next play, May ran to the right side of the field and threw to tight end Brad Seib in the end zone for the touchdown.

The extra point gave K-State a 21-17 win.

"We put two tight ends in there and a heavy backfield," Snyder said.

"We did it before (against Colorado) and scored. It was meant to fake the run."

Oklahoma State coach Pat Jones said his defense didn't do its job.

"We didn't get it done. We stood there and watched them catch the ball," Jones said.

"You can't do those things, not in a tight ball game, not against a team that's going to a bowl.

Game Notes K-STATE VS. OKLAHOMA STATE

✔ The Wildcats' 8-2-1 record is their best since the 1932 team went 8-2.

✔ Chad May extended his streak of games with a touchdown pass to 10, which is a Big Eight record.

✔ With 228 yards passing, May broke Lynn Dickey's single-season school record for most passing yards in a season with 2,682. This also breaks the Big Eight record for the most passing yards in a season by a junior. May now stands in third on the all-time Big Eight single-season passing charts.

✔ "On a personal note, I feel good because Lynn Dickey was well respected in college and in the pros," May said after the game. "He was a highly regarded quarterback, and I broke most of his records, so that says a little bit for me."

✔ With 77-yards receiving, Andre Coleman moved into third on K-State's all-time receiving lists.

✔ J.J. Smith's 79-yards rushing moved him into fifth-place on K-State's single-season rushing charts. Smith now has 748 yards on the season.

✔ With his touchdown in the second quarter, Smith moved his season total points to 72. That's the most since Ralph Graham's 85 in 1932.

✔ Senior kicker Tate Wright tied Ralph Graham's record for most career points with 196 points.

✔ Jaime Mendez was selected a Kodak All-American Saturday. Mendez and Nebraska's Trev Alberts were the only two members of the Big Eight to earn the award.

Men take on Tankers tonight at Bramlage

WESS HUDELSON
Collegian

The men's basketball team will wrap up its exhibition season against the Fort Hood Tankers from Ft. Hood Army base in Killeen, Texas at 7:30 p.m. tonight at Bramlage Coliseum.

The Tankers play a 28-game schedule this year, against a variety of Division I schools, junior colleges and other army bases.

Last Wednesday, the Tankers lost to Texas 101-82 at Texas.

Former Michigan State star Vernon Carr led Ft. Hood with 23 points against Texas and grabbed 10 rebounds in the contest.

The Tankers hit just 24-of-72 field goal attempts against Texas, including 3-of-13 from 3-point range.

Texas was led by Albert Burditt with 25 points and Terrence Rencher with 23 points.

K-State defeated Fort Hood last season, 92-77. Carr scored 33 points in the contest, hitting seven of his eleven 3-point attempts.

Teammate Larry Coates added 19 points in the Tanker loss.

Askia Jones set the pace for the Wildcats with 28 points on 10-of-13 field goals, including 5-of-7 from beyond the 3-point stripe.

Deryl Cunningham added 14 points and seven rebounds in the game.

The Wildcats open the 1993-94 regular season against Southern Mississippi at 7:30 p.m. Saturday, Nov. 27 at Bramlage Coliseum.

K-State won its first exhibition game of the season against the Central Army Sports Club of Russia.

Sun 60's style hard to determine, label

DAVE OLSON
Collegian

REVIEW

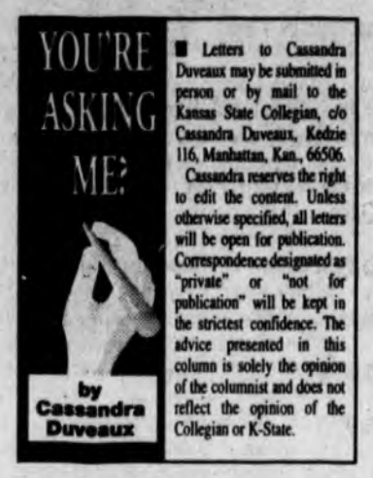
The essence of writing music reviews is the ability to stick some sort of label on a band. By comparing new music to that of more well-known bands, the music reviewer hopes to provide the reader with a mental sample of the group's sound.

Bands like Sun 60 throw a massive wrench into this process.

This Los Angeles band's style is hard to pin down and is derived from a diverse collection of influences. Sun 60's recent Epic release, "Only," features music ranging from guitar-happy, Byrds-style ditties to swanky, neo-'70s funk.

Sun 60's songs are the result of the collaboration of two vocalists: guitar and piano player David Russo and trumpet player Joan Jones. In addition to bassist Glen Holmen, Russo and Jones are backed up by a long list of hired-gun percussionists and guitar players.



A Byrds comparison is unavoidable for several of Sun 60's cuts, especially the radio-friendly "Mary XMess" and "Hiding House." The airy, fuzzed-out guitars and droning choruses evokes images of California shores. "Hiding House" also smells a little like southern rock in its twangy, meandering approach.

Other songs on "Only" diverge from this format, however. "Somebody" has a distinct Caribbean flavor, and "Never Seen God" is driven by funky wah-wah.

About half the songs on the album are basically ballads with a little meat added on by way of horns and understated guitar. The closing song, "Pressure," is pretentious-sounding, Siouxsie and the Banshees-type trash.

Russo and Jones are good song writers. All the music on "Only" sounds effortless and familiar, which is the hardest kind of music to write.

Overall, Sun 60 is worth a listen, but the band works best when it ups the tempo and fuzzes out the guitars.

Dear Cassandra,

My boyfriend and I have been going out for more than a year. We have always attended separate colleges. Our relationship is fine except for the fact that we both live alone.

Since I am new to the college I am currently attending, I made an effort to get out and join clubs and organizations. I have a social network of friends who give me support when I feel all alone.

The problem is my boyfriend. Since he's been going to K-State for a while, I thought he'd know some people. But he doesn't. He knows about two people. I'm dead serious.

This semester he decided to live in the dorms as a matter of convenience. I thought he'd live there and maybe meet friends. No such thing.

He bought this cool game called Mortal Kombat, and he leaves his door open so that people will come play the game with him. Nobody is even interested.

He says he can't make friends in the dorm because he didn't make contact that first week of residency. Sometimes I am the only person he talks to all day. He loses his voice and has to get it back to talk to me on the phone in the evening.

Don't tell me to try to get him to join any clubs or organizations. He won't even try. What can I do to make this situation any better?

Signed,
Concerned Girlfriend

Dear Concerned Girlfriend,

Your boyfriend sounds, how shall I say ... socially dysfunctional. It is my belief that we should take responsibility for what we make happen in our lives.

He needs to make friends, as you have. He really shouldn't blame not getting out during the first week of residency. That's a cop-out. It is never too late to make friends. He should just get out there and do it.

Finally — you have to stop taking responsibility for his unhappiness. First, it is destructive for you if your worries over him start to interfere with your schoolwork. And second, he has to fix his life, not you.

Talk to him. Don't coddle him. Tell him to get his butt in gear and to stop feeling sorry for himself. Call it, how shall I say ... constructive criticism.

Get it all here, even Boogas

WILLIAM F. MCKEEN III
Collegian

It's a place where it seems everyone would know your name.

Bobby T's nicknames itself "A neighborhood fundrinkery for everyone," and it fulfills its title.

Bobby T's may not be a laugh a minute, but it's a nice place to go if someone is in the mood for good food, drinking beers and watching the game, or just hanging out with friends to shoot pool.

The decor of Bobby T's is by no means outstanding. Nor is it boring. It's just a place where a person can sit back and relax without spending time staring at every little object and picture on the wall. It is plain.

The good type of plainness there should be in a "neighborhood bar."

Bobby T's menu is just as enjoyable. There are no glamorous and glitzy items. It serves good run-of-the-mill bar and grille food: hamburgers, steaks and sandwiches. The items I tried had a good fresh flavor, and all the meals are reasonably priced.

BOBBY T'S

■ Bobby T's Bar & Deli is at 3240 Kimball Drive

The hamburgers, or as the restaurant calls them, Boogas, are served with lettuce, tomato and onion.

Bobby T's has quite a selection of boogas: the Bear Booga, Cheeze Booga, Mama Mia Booga, Hicko Booga, Swishroom Booga and the Cheddar Bacon Booga. They come with a choice of side orders and make quite a satisfying meal.

One interesting thing Bobby T's has done with its Boogas is serve them on a steak bun. The oblong shape of the booga makes it more enjoyable to eat than a big round burger, which can be difficult to manipulate with the hands, not to mention how sloppy it can become. Bobby T's has definitely made an advancement in burger technology.

The restaurant also has quite an array of salads, from oriental to Santa Fe.

The homemade desserts are a good complement to any meal. The cherry pie was first rate. The crust was nice and flaky, and the filling had a good sweetness.

For those who would like to have a few drinks and something to munch on, there is a nice assortment of reasonably priced appetizers: nachos, fried mushrooms, poppers, etc.

Poppers, jalapeños filled with cream cheese and then deep fried, are quite a tasty treat. Or, for those short on cash, popcorn or chips and cheese dip are served complimentary.

Sitting and eating aren't the only things that make Bobby T's a good place to go.

Bobby T's offers a wide array of diversions. The big-screen TV and other smaller televisions around the bar turn Bobby T's into somewhat of a sports bar from Monday Night Football to college ball on Saturdays and various other sports.

The pool tables, dart board, shuffle board and clack (a dice game) are fun to sit around and play while enjoying a beer.

Also, on certain weekends Bobby T's offers live music or karoake.

The only major problem with Bobby T's is it is one of the few bars that offers the normal array of draft beers, such as Coors Light, Bud and Bud Light. Other bars, however, offer such drafts as Boulevard's or Samuel Adams.

Bobby T's is a delightful place for whatever mood arises.

CATEGORIES

To help you find what you are looking for, the classified ads have been arranged by category and sub-category. All categories are marked by one of the large images, and sub-categories are preceded by a number designation.

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD

Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.

Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.

Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

Red ribbons wave for AIDS week

VICKY TILLIER
Collegian

K-State's communicable-disease committee wants the Rev. Jesse Jackson to comment on issues pertaining to HIV/AIDS Awareness Week during his Nov. 29 Landon Lecture.

The Rev. Don Fallon, chair of the committee, said Charles Reagan, assistant to President Jon Wefald, will greet Jackson at the airport with a red ribbon and letter drafted by the committee members.

The letter will ask Jackson to acknowledge HIV/ AIDS Awareness Week and Worldwide AIDS Day during his speech.

In his letter, Fallon said the committee wants Jackson to talk about HIV/AIDS Awareness Week because Jackson has expressed his concern for those afflicted with the disease.

The communicable-disease committee discussed its final plans for the awareness week Thursday afternoon.

The week will be Nov. 29 to Dec. 3, and several events have been planned to educate students on campus.

Sponsors of the awareness week will be handing red ribbons to people outside of Bramlage Coliseum as they come inside for the lecture.

The committee members said they would like people to wear the red ribbon all week to remember people who have died from AIDS.

Committee members said they would also like K-State and the Manhattan community to be part of the audience during a panel discussion scheduled for 7:30 p.m. Nov. 29 at the K-State Union.

A memorial candlelight vigil will take place following the discussion outside the K-State Union and Seaton Hall to honor those who have died.

"We will hand people candles as soon as they come out," Reita Currie, Lafene health educator, said.

Each year a K-State student dies from AIDS, Fallon said.

"There have been other alumni students that have come home to die," Fallon said.

Several speakers will tell students what it is like to live with the HIV virus at 6:30 p.m. Nov. 29 in Union 212.

There will be an opportunity for students to ask any questions they have.

A theater troupe from Fort Hays State University will perform at 6:30 p.m. Nov. 30 in Union Station.

"Tiger By The Tale" will use its performance to portray issues related to HIV/AIDS, STDs, drunken driving, homophobia, sexual abstinence, peer pressure, condom use, suicide and racism, as well as other topics of concern.

The committee members said they would like to see more students attend programs and panel discussions.

One member said there wasn't a large turnout at the last HIV/AIDS Awareness Week panel discussions.

"We could announce it to the biology instructors," Emin Ulug, assistant professor of biology, said.

"Sometimes, students just need a little kick in the rear to go to these things," Ulug said.

U.S. official held captive

ASSOCIATED PRESS

SAN'A, Yemen — The army sent more troops to close in on a desert hideout where tribesmen have been holding American diplomat Haynes Mahoney hostage since Thanksgiving, official sources said Sunday.

Two military helicopters hovered over the region as soldiers, supported by at least two tanks, moved toward the hideout in Gahm, about 40 miles northeast of San'a, the capital.

The sources, speaking on condition of anonymity, said hundreds of military personnel were taking part in the operation.

Mahoney is the station chief in Yemen for the U.S. Information Service.

A U.S. diplomat confirmed Sunday that Yemeni government envoys had seen Mahoney in captivity and returned with messages from the hostage to the embassy and his family assuring them he was being well-treated.

"The Yemeni government is mediating and has sent people who have seen him," said Rick Roberts, the USIS chief in Riyadh, Saudi Arabia.

"We're in close contact, and we're completely assured the Yemeni government is doing what it can to secure his release," said Roberts, who was flown in after Mahoney's abduction. He spoke in a telephone interview.

Five gunmen intercepted Mahoney Thursday night a block away from the Taj Sheba Hotel, where he had attended a British Airways reception. They took him and his car.

The Interior Ministry said the kidnappers were tribesmen and have made demands of the San'a government but did not specify them or identify the tribe to which they belong.

Jackson to speak at Bramlage

STEPHANIE FUQUA
Collegian

After preaching civil rights for more than two decades, the Rev. Jesse Jackson, clergyman and civic leader, will bring his message of economic freedom, regardless of color, to K-State.

He will speak as part of the Landon Lecture Series at 10:30 a.m. today in Bramlage Coliseum. Admission is free, and the specific topic of the speech has not been announced.

Jackson has been in the public eye beginning in the 1960s, when he fought for civil rights with the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., continuing through the '80s when he twice ran for president.

Born Oct. 8, 1941, in Greensville, S. C., Jesse Louis Jackson is the illegitimate son of a South Carolina sharecropper, Noah Robinson, and Helen Burns.

When Jackson was a child, his mother married Charles Jackson, a postal worker and janitor, who adopted Jackson when he was 15.

He went to segregated schools in Greenville, including the all-black Sterling High School, where he played basketball, baseball and was the quarterback on the all-state championship team.

He left South Carolina for the University of Illinois on a football scholarship but left the University when he was told a black man couldn't play quarterback as they were expected to be linemen.

Jackson enrolled at the North Carolina Agriculture and Technical State University in Greensboro, N. C., where he received his bachelor's degree in sociology and economics in 1964.

During his college years he led a 10-month campaign of marches and sit-ins on behalf of civil rights, a road that would cross his path with that of Martin Luther King Jr.

In the mid-60s, when Jackson was a student at the Chicago Theological Seminary, King and the Southern Christian Leadership Conference established Operation Breadbasket to pressure Atlanta businesses to end discriminatory hiring practices. King expanded Operation Breadbasket into Chicago in 1966 and picked Jackson to run the operation.

Jackson was ordained as a Baptist minister in 1968 and founded Operation PUSH, People United to Serve Humanity, a community organization on Chicago's south side in 1971. PUSH became a campaign to restore racial pride and economic parity, with Jackson traveling and speaking to

K-State police anticipate no problems

Landon lectures have a history of peaceful protests

BOB FLEENER
Collegian

K-State Police Capt. Charles Beckom said he doesn't anticipate any protest problems concerning Jesse Jackson's Landon Lecture today.

Beckom said protests of Landon Lecture speakers and other events on campus do happen from time to time. He said believes the protesters have the same right to speak as anyone else.

"If there is one place that is so judiciously protective of the free speech, it is on the University campus. That is what sparks the understanding and the educational process," Beckom said. "You have to protect it."

Beckom said his experiences of 23 years have given him many opportunities to work with public demonstrations. In all those years he said he has never had a situation in which demonstrators could not be accommodated.

"There has always been a reasonable agreement for all involved so that all sides, in fact, could express their views without interfering with the other," Beckom said.

The Robertson demonstrators were cooperative when presenting their views, Beckom said.

There were several groups demonstrating at the Robertson lecture, he said.

The K-State Police Department has a multi-fold concern when there is an event on campus — protecting the freedom of speech, the right of the people to attend the event and to provide space to all those wishing to demonstrate, he said.

"Our concern is that you can do what you want to do, as long as it doesn't interfere with access to the public buildings or jeopardize the safety of someone not associated with that activity," Beckom said. "You can't break the law. And we are very clear on that."

The department does not have an agenda, Beckom said.

"It's not our opinion and what we think. They are the public, and we will serve them. Our own personal views are not even considered," Beckom said.

JACKSON SPEAKS AT BRAMLAGE

The Rev. Jesse Jackson will speak as part of the Landon Lecture Series today at 10:30 a.m. in Bramlage Coliseum. The topic of his speech has not been announced.

Jackson fought for civil rights in the 1960s with the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. and ran for the presidency twice during the 80s. He founded PUSH, People United to Serve Humanity, in 1971, and has been controversial in the past as a result of his support for the Palestine Liberation Organization and Black Muslim leader Louis Farrakhan.

Prominent speakers honored at K-State through prestigious series

KEN DIEBEL
Collegian

K-State is much more than just a little Midwestern cow college.

The quality of its Landon Lecture Series is the envy of other universities, and former President Bush called it one of the best in the nation.

"From the very beginning there was an effort to make the series special," said William Richter, interim assistant provost for international programs and past chairman of the Landon Lecture Series. "We wanted to draw top speakers."

The organizers of the series have succeeded.

Every living U.S. president except Bill Clinton has come to K-State as part of the lecture series. The list of past lecturers includes presidential candidates, senators, U.S. representatives, U.S. Supreme Court justices, cabinet members, prominent journalists and foreign leaders.

In the early years of the series, which started in 1966, the prominence of Alfred Landon, Kansas governor and presidential candidate in 1936, was the main reason people agreed to speak at K-State, Richter said.

"They came to see him and to honor him," Richter said.

In recent years the eminence of past speakers carried the momentum and attracted people. Invited speakers usually receive a copy of a brochure that contains a list of past speakers, Richter said.

"They usually decide that this is a group they wouldn't mind being a part of," he said.

Three people have taken the credit for starting the lecture series, which has attracted such prominent people to K-State.

According to documents in the K-State University Archives, James McCain, former K-State president, claimed the idea originated in a conversation he had with Landon over a sandwich and a cup of coffee.

LANDON LECTURE HISTORY

- The series began in 1966.
- Every living president except Bill Clinton has spoken as part of the series.

William Boyer, the first chairman of the Landon Lecture Series, wrote in the book "The Landon Lectures: Perspectives from the First Twenty Years," that he suggested the idea of having a public affairs lecture series to Landon.

Another account has it that Landon himself had the idea and approached the University of Kansas to host the series.

KU turned him down and Landon went to K-State President McCain, who accepted, Richter said.

"All three stories are probably true," Richter said. "I think it developed from the interactions among these three people."

No matter who had the idea first, the resulting series has been a success.

Among the most heavily attended speeches was Sen. Robert Kennedy's in 1968, which outlined his reasons for opposing the Vietnam War.

It essentially launched Kennedy's presidential campaign, wrote Boyer, and was delivered just a few months before his assassination.

Former President Reagan's speech in 1982 also drew one of the largest crowds in the lecture series' history, Richter said.

Reagan is one of the few people to have given a lecture twice. He previously spoke in 1967 when he was governor of California and a presidential candidate.

Hecklers and protesters have dogged some speakers.

A small group of agitators interrupted the speech of Sheikh Ahmed Zaki Yamani so many times the auditorium had to be emptied, and the protesters arrested. Eventually the audience returned, and Yamani delivered one of the best Landon Lectures, Richter said.

Protesters shouted at former President Nixon during his Landon Lecture in 1970. Nixon had just announced the invasion of Cambodia.

"His action intensified the poisonous atmosphere of mistrust," wrote Joseph Hajda, former chairman of the Landon Lecture Series.

As a result of the Nixon experience, where protesters were not allowed to demonstrate outside the auditorium, protesters are now built into the process, Richter said.

"When Reagan came we made specific provisions for protesters," Richter said. "It worked well with Reagan, and as you saw with Pat Robertson, the protest was peaceful."

MOB STORMS GEORGIAN BAKERY

TBILISI, Georgia— A mob broke into one of the last working bakeries in the Georgian capital on Sunday, three days before bread-rationing was to begin.

Bread shortages and attacks on bakeries have become increasingly common in Georgia, where a civil war in the west and a separatist movement in the Abkhazia province have left the economy in tatters and electricity in short supply.

500 people gathered outside the iron gates of Bread Factory No. 2 overnight in sub-freezing temperatures. At about 2 a.m., some 80 people led by two armed men got through the gates.

Many people now stand in line all night to buy bread in Tbilisi, where bread sells on the black market for more than 30 times the price in government stores. The price of a black-market loaf now equals about one-third of the median monthly income.

Weekend shoppers start holiday season

Consumers who spent erratically for much of this year regained their zest for shopping during the Thanksgiving weekend, giving the nation's retailers an encouraging start to the Christmas season.

Several big storeowners said Sunday that consumers, while budget-conscious, were buying more frills and luxury items.

"It's a healthy sign that people are buying in the categories that show they have some liquidity," said Myron Ullman III, chairman of R.H. Macy & Co. Inc.

Ullman said Macy did better than expected over the weekend. Sears, Roebuck and Co. also reported it exceeded its sales plan.

Retailers in the Midwest and on the East Coast lost some business to foul weather. But since the rain, sleet and snow came so early in the season, most expect to make up the sales.

Endeavour to launch Wednesday for Hubble

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — The countdown began Sunday for the Hubble Space Telescope repair mission, considered by many to be NASA's biggest challenge in space since the Apollo moon landings.

The space shuttle Endeavour is scheduled to lift off on the 11-day flight in pre-dawn darkness Wednesday.

Hubble program managers and scientists were thrilled to be this close to correcting the telescope's fuzzy vision and other problems. Even normally placid launch officials were caught in the excitement.

"This is a very, very exciting mission," shuttle test director Mike Leinbach said soon after the countdown clocks started ticking.

"It's been billed as one of the most important missions NASA's had in a long, long time, and we're all anxious for it to go."

Endeavour's crew will go out five and possibly seven times to work on Hubble after the bus-sized telescope is anchored in the shuttle cargo bay.

Traffic accidents claim eight during weekend

Traffic accidents killed eight people on Kansas roads this holiday weekend, including three members of a Chanute family killed Saturday in a one-vehicle crash.

The family's minivan was northbound on new U.S. 169 in Anderson County near Garnett when the driver lost control of the van, which struck a guardrail, overturned and was submerged upside down in a roadside pond, the Kansas Highway Patrol said.

Samuel Carraway, 41, Katherine Carraway, 37, and Lindsey Carraway, 12, all were killed in the crash, which happened about 10:15 a.m.

Curtis J. Eastland, 26, Spring Hill, died about 3 p.m. Saturday on U.S. 169 two miles north of Paola. Eastland's car was struck head-on by another car that slipped on ice and crossed the centerline, the patrol said.

Olathe police said Samuel Henderson, 48, Olathe, died when his vehicle slid off a street and struck a tree about 3 p.m. Saturday.

Steven Garza, 25, Goodland, died Saturday in a one-vehicle accident in Goodland. Police said they would not release details of the early-morning accident until Monday.

Late Wednesday, James Sparks, 49, and his wife, Mary Sparks, 58, Afton, Okla., were killed when their vehicle crashed on U.S. 166 in Chautauqua County, the sheriff's department said.

Army lifts curfew as Sopore buries dead

SOPORE, India (AP) — Residents of a suspected rebel stronghold where 17 people were gunned down by government troops buried their dead Sunday and sifted through the debris of nearly 300 homes and shops gutted by fire.

The army lifted a curfew imposed a day earlier, when troops cordoned off the town of Sopore to flush out suspected separatist militants.

Residents said the fire was set by the troops, but the army said it had intercepted messages from militant leaders telling their supporters to set fire to the buildings to divert the soldiers' attention.

Police said eight of the victims were militants. Two were nationals of Pakistan and Afghanistan, police said.

Ten people were hospitalized with gunshot injuries, an officer said.

Two hundred women in black veils wept over the body of 42-year-old Ghulam Rasool Dhar on Sunday.

Helping hands at Job Corps

CRYSTAL GOERING
Collegian

Volunteering to help the less fortunate can be not only a rewarding experience, but hard work.

One organization, the Flint Hills Job Corps, is helping to improve food distribution to the needy through the Flint Hills Breadbasket.

The Flint Hill Job Corps is a program designed to educate people from ages 16 to 24 in different areas.

Marc Kline, student at the facility and assistant to the work placement specialist, said vocational skills, assistance in obtaining a high school diploma, completing the General Education Diploma and even improvement of social skills are taught at the facility.

The Job Corps was established in 1957 to assist young people who did not have a positive home life and were in need of special attention, Kline said.

"It's not a jail. It's the army in a way," he said. "When you sign the papers, there are rules you have to live by."

Two hundred students, from many different backgrounds, are allowed to attend. A residence hall is reserved for single-parent families and their children. The parents can attend K-State while the children are in day care, Kline said. A counselor is also available to help residents with personal problems, encourage social responsibility through interaction and charitable acts.

Brian Lemasters, resident at Job Corps, said he feels he has learned a lot about himself and life through the services offered.

"My attitude toward people has changed. Around here you learn not to be gullible and naive," he said. "Now unless you can prove it, you're lying. I'm glad I came here."

Charitable acts are also a large part of the learning. Pat Palin, coordinator of Job Corps involvement in the Breadbasket, said the students volunteer their time every Thursday afternoon to help with the Breadbasket.

"We try to take different students every week and give everyone a chance to go. I enjoy going with them, and they enjoy working with it," she said. "Before I worked here, I worked at the Breadbasket. I knew of the need for help, and of nonperishables."

The students sort cans and organize and stock shelves for the Breadbasket.

In the past, the Job Corps has served in the Breadbasket in different ways, Kline said. The students in the vocational divisions of Job Corps assisted in several aspects of construction for the Breadbasket.

Carpentry students assisted in the construction of a new addition to the main building, and the plumbing and construction of oak cabinets were also courtesy of the Job Corps students. In addition, the cement masonry department put down the parking lot, Kline said.

Shirley Bramhall, director of the Flint Hills Breadbasket, said she appreciates the help provided by the Job Corps.

"They've done a lot of good work for the Breadbasket," she said. "They're always there to help."

Brandon Fegan, resident of Job Corps, said he feels he's received a lot of help from the different programs offered at the school.

"I've learned a lot of responsibility" he said. "When I leave, I'm going to miss the companionship and love."

Kline agreed.

"You're here to learn a trade and better yourself," he said. "The everyday work is hard to live with, but you learn to deal with your stress. It basically saved my life."

Shalala tours hospital, sympathizes with patients

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The gunshot victims are getting younger and they're arriving at the emergency room with multiple bullet wounds, doctors at Howard University Hospital told Health and Human Services Secretary Donna Shalala on Sunday.

Shalala was one of several administration officials making hospital visits on the same day in Washington and other cities to promote President Clinton's health plan.

At the nation's largest private, African American-owned hospital, Shalala learned that about 35 percent of the patients are uninsured; many are victims of violence; substance abuse often complicates their illnesses, and some have to be finger-printed just to learn their identities.

Shalala called it "heartbreaking" when emergency room doctors told her that many of their patients held off visiting primary care physicians because they had no insurance. By the time they arrived in the emergency room, their conditions had become serious.

At Children's Hospital in Washington, Interior Secretary Bruce Babbitt learned of the difficulties parents face when confronted with long-term, life-threatening health problems.

Emmanuel Ikegwu, whose son Joshua suffers from sickle cell anemia and has recently developed kidney disease, told Babbitt his current insurance is not helping enough, and he's almost exhausted his savings on medical bills. Ikegwu has four children, two with sickle cell disease.

He complained that even with a doctorate in languages, he does not earn enough to cover the mounting medical costs.

Rick Hyde, whose son Danny suffers from cancer, said his current insurance policy does not cover outpatient chemotherapy since Danny's cancer treatment was considered a preexisting condition.

"The ones who need it most have no access at all," Babbitt said.

AIDS awareness should be brought into the modern era

Milt Pippenger, superintendent of the school district that includes Garden City, has managed to both get a hit and strike out in the ongoing game of sexual education for students.

In April, Donna Sweet, a doctor who travels all over Kansas to inform students on the dangers of promiscuous sex, visited Garden City and spoke with a number of citizens about her cause. School officials were impressed enough to invite her back to speak to the area's student bodies.

She accepted, but since then new people have come to power, including Pippenger, and they resisted the idea of having her speak to any students. They even canceled her visit two months ago, stirring up debate all over the district.

It seems Pippenger and his supporters get squeamish about the idea of intellectual talk about condoms and safe sex. Especially to teen-agers, who should "Just say no" and call it good.

Now Sweet will be allowed to speak at the school, but not during class time. The speech is set for tonight, well after the kids have filed out of the halls of higher learning.

Pippenger and his supporters have let a wonderful educational opportunity slip away, especially one that would make an excellent precursor to AIDS Awareness Week, which begins today. All because they feel talking about sex is condoning sex.

Idiocy.

As the Rev. James Liggett, pastor rector of the St. Thomas Episcopal Church, said, "We are sitting ducks for HIV to invade the mainstream of the population. Our students are at risk and need all the information they can get. The decision was irrational."

Holding the meeting in the evening defeats the purpose. Most students won't be there, because of jobs or homework or lack of interest. Only by bringing it to them in a learning atmosphere can sex ed be effective. And Pippenger and Co. have effectively eliminated that.

The Dark Ages are over. And our students can handle sex ed. It seems it is the adults who can't handle it. And unless they grow up soon, it is our children who will be put at risk.

Facing reality biggest test of all

DEB TAYLOR
GUEST COLUMNIST

This is National AIDS Awareness week. I've been aware of AIDS and HIV since my brothers, Steve and Chris, tested HIV positive back in 1986 and 1988. I can't even remember my initial reaction to their sharing this news with me. As the years have gone by, we have simply developed a certain complacency toward HIV and AIDS.

I was quite comfortable in my complacent position until a professional acquaintance asked me how I planned to deal with the fact my brothers are going to die. Talk about anger. And denial. I was suddenly being forced out of my cozy trance of indifference.

My indifference gradually transformed into an active search for answers. Through my readings, I learned how funding for AIDS was virtually nonexistent in its early years. This is because fear and prejudice strangled intelligence and conviction in the medical field and science industry as personnel were chastised and even threatened for working on a "gay" disease.

Even in the gay community, fear and denial caused gay leaders to ignore the early pleas of the few public-health officials who strongly encouraged practicing safer sex. The result was practically an entire nation apathetic to this killer disease thousands had died of.

Until very recently, the only noncomplacent mover has been the AIDS virus itself. AIDS has consistently plotted a path more curious and sinister than any atrocity from a Stephen King novel. It has violated healthy young people, imposing on them the oddest of diseases, from toxoplasmosis to Kaposi's Sarcoma — a skin cancer that causes purple lesions. AIDS crosses all boundaries.

I have come to the conclusion that far too many people are still in perpetual state of denial with respect to AIDS. This denial is strong enough to cause parents to disown children who have AIDS if their children are gay. I have often wondered what would be worse: Fred Phelps and his obnoxious clan holding up their "God Hates Fags" signs at our family funerals or burying our family members by ourselves because our parents had previously disowned our gay siblings.

The opposite of denial is awareness. And searching, coping, accepting and preparing follow awareness. To this end, I have decided to no longer deny my brothers' illness.

With respect to my brothers' health, HIV has acted like a cancer in a suspended remission. It has been so unobtrusive in their lives that they both liken being HIV positive to being diabetic; as long as they rest, exercise and eat well, they can continue to live normal and healthy lives. I am glad they are healthy. But I also know that AIDS takes great delight in catching its prey in trance-like states of satisfaction and complacency.

At present, my family is in a comfortable yet false sense of hope. Since we are still on our collision course of denial, I fear that the first time Steve or Chris develops an opportunistic infection — which is an undeniable manifestation of AIDS and a foreshadowing of horrible events to come — my family will probably fall apart. We have never fully dealt with AIDS as an illness or with the implications surrounding AIDS.

My family needs to talk about this issue as a family, and so does anyone who has a family member or friend with HIV/AIDS. If we talk about it now, while my brothers are healthy, we will be better equipped to manage the anxiety, which will certainly grip us when Steve and Chris become ill. We will be thoughtful, supportive and caring instead of angry, hurtful and destructive. We will be strong and not accusing or guilty.

Some days, I weep over the fact that my two young and very wonderful brothers carry in them a virus, which has the power to someday steal them from me. Other days, I feel guilty I am not HIV positive, and they are. On really bad days, I think about getting their AIDS quilt patches ready. I have them dead already.

When I'm overly anxious, I call my brothers and nag them for smoking or getting drunk or for staying out too late. Once, I even forced my own agenda on them: When they developed AIDS, I would get them and their belongings and move them here to stay with me. Moving from Chicago (Steve) and New York (Chris) to Manhattan, Kan., would be no problem, I assured them, because I would be here. Anxiety certainly has a way of blinding us from reality.

Fortunately for everyone involved, months and more soul searching have calmed me down. Instead of being Steve and Chris' mother, therapist and physician (they have all three), I have decided to be their sister. I still call to see how they're doing, and now we focus more on brother and sister things. I have let them know that I am ready to support whatever decisions they make for themselves with respect to AIDS and their futures.

My family has a long way to go in our awareness journey. But each time, we work toward focusing on the facts of HIV and AIDS, as opposed to the emotional turbulence and controversy surrounding the disease, we become clearer, more focused family. In my own journey, I would rather enjoy who and what my brothers are today, and relish the joy we share right now, than wonder with remorse what could have been tomorrow.

Beware the new revival of Charles Manson

SO NOW I WAIT ON THOSE WHO'LL FIND JEFFREY DAHMER A HERO BECAUSE HE FOOLED THE PIGS FOR SO LONG.

Last week, while enjoying my little helping of turkey dinner with CNN as a side dish, I had the unfortunate experience of watching a news report that nearly caused me to asphyxiate on a mouthful of dressing.

With tears in my eyes and bread crumbs coming out of my nose, I listened as the news anchor talked about how the new Guns and Roses album, "The Spaghetti Incident," contains a song written by none other than Charles Manson.

It seems that Manson, before becoming well-known for his part in the death of actress Sharon Tate and a number of others, was quite active on the West Coast counterculture scene and composed a song or two while in the Terminal Island facility in California. Well, G & R, in their undying quest for the bizarre, took one of those songs and did a remake of it.

And ol' Chuck Manson will get about 60 grand in royalties because he penned this little ditty before earning himself a prison cell. The law about earning royalties of your criminal exploits doesn't apply here because the song is ex poste facto, baby.

This Charles trend isn't new. Manson Mania has been growing for some time. Now, one can purchase shirts with Manson's face across the front, carrying such logos as "Charles Knows Surfing" and the like. He is quickly becoming a cult hero in certain parts of this great nation.

It sickens me to no end. Enough time has passed that what this fine specimen of society did no longer means much, as long as it makes a buck.

JARED SAVAGE
OPINION PAGE EDITOR

So let me tell you about Mr. Manson and his little crew.

By his little crew I mean the people that he came to control during his years ensconced in the acid-hippie movement. After having spent 20 years as a convict, he managed to make himself into a guru, a person that reflected what these drug-using twits that followed him wanted to be. He became their reason for living and would do anything for him, including actions of a highly illegal nature.

One of his followers, Squeaky Fromme, was convicted of attempting to assassinate President Gerald Ford. Only a secret service agent putting his finger between the hammer and firing pin of her gun saved the President's life.

Manson made himself into the new Christ, calling his followers the Family and fully intended on changing a world that he believed had gone terribly awry.

This all culminated when Manson accompanied many of his followers "to do the devil's work."

Manson was mixed up in credit-card fraud. He ran a car chop-shop on the Family ranch. He played a key part in the murder of a drug dealer, an ex-neighbor and most likely a number of other unproved deaths.

One night, he talked his family into murdering actress Sharon Tate and three other house guests. Tate was 8-1/2 months pregnant when killed.

Manson and a number of his followers were convicted of murder and given the death penalty. Since California no longer has a death penalty, he'll likely spend the rest of his life in prison.

I have written before about the astonishing lack of leadership, or even heroes, that faces us as a culture. Politicians are crooked, athletes are greedy, and writers face a nation of diminishing reading ability. So to correct this, we've turned to others who we hope time has made worthy of our allegiance.

So now I wait on those who'll find Jeffrey Dahmer a hero because he fooled the pigs for so long. Or Michael Milikin because he turned a lifetime of bilking people out of their cash into a respectable post-prison career.

Overreaction? Perhaps. Likely, this Manson thing will fade with time, just like the Guns and Roses thing. We are a nation that bores quickly, having an attention span of less than a few sound bytes.

But what does it say of us when we find the ideals of a psychopath worthy of recreation, when a group of us place this man upon a pedestal? Do we say that it's just a stage, or do we need to take a harder look at what society deems as acceptable?

Lots of questions. I just hope we don't continue to look for the answers in the minds of our worst criminals.

Lawrence downtown may be dying

Commissioners concerned about bars in district

BOB MACHA
Collegian

Lawrence city commissioners expressed a concern recently that Massachusetts Street might become Lawrence's version of Aggieville.

The Lawrence commission, Commissioner Bob Moody said, is concerned that Lawrence's downtown might die, and some store owners are concerned about what they call the bad side effects of bar districts.

"The problem is not everybody acts responsibly when they drink," Moody said. "There are store owners who have complained about people vomiting in doorways and urine being found on the sidewalks."

He said the city commission is looking at options to alleviate the problem. The most probable at this time appears to be the implementation of zoning laws that would not allocate zoning permits for bars, he said.

Mass Street, as it is commonly called, is not only a district for the drinking establishments, Moody said, but also for shopping and fine dining.

He said there are too many bars in the downtown district, and other types of people are being alienated from the shopping district as a result.

He said the origins of the problem are simple.

"Two years ago the voters in Douglas County receded the 30-percent requirement on food sales on drinking establishments."

The commission's initial response was to consider the freezing of liquor licenses, Moody said. However, he said he thought that was too drastic.

Brad Boerger, rhythm guitarist for Lawrence band the L.A. Ramblers, said while he likes Aggieville, he thinks the Lawrence City Commission is taking appropriate action.

"Manhattan is a crazy place. I love it. You have cowboys, brothers, punks, and I just wonder who's going to fire the first shot," he said.

Boerger said it was a problem getting people to act responsibly in Lawrence and Manhattan.

Jerry Sloan, Lawrence resident and K-State graduate, said he thought the drinking establishments were a positive thing in Lawrence. He did express a concern, however.

"I understand too much of a good thing is excess," he said. "The key point is where to draw the line."

John Stucky, waiter at Paradise Cafe in Lawrence, said the concentration of drinking establishments was good because police know where to patrol.

The owner of Lawrence's Sunflower Outdoor and Bike Shop, Sharon England, said there is an appeal because of the architecture of the district. She said there are definite economic advantages to the location.

The owner of the Free State Brewery, Chuck Magerl, said businesses of one type tend to be established in the same location.

"Bars aren't buying up existing retail space," Magerl said. "The major rift is how much to continue to regard as the major retail district or if additional land should be developed in suburban shopping areas."

Lawrence City Commissioner Jo Anderson said the issue is related to the entire city.

"A lot of issues tie into this. We have to lot at the whole picture," Anderson said.

She said some planners are concerned too much of the downtown business space is what is termed to be marginal use.

"Retail anchors a downtown. You get support from offices."

Drinking establishments don't provide the needed cash flow, he said. This is the reason that more space needs to be devoted to retail.

She said a modification of zoning laws is now being considered. Lawrence now has one bar for every 1,000 people, Anderson said.

"Manhattan would change without Aggieville and not for the better," Manhattan Mayor Roger Maughmer said.

Aggieville is not the main shopping district for Manhattan, he said.

"It is not derogatory," he said. "The truth is there are differences. Aggieville is not the focal point of town like Massachusetts Street is for Lawrence."

Jackson ran twice for the U.S. presidency

crowds who would chant, "I am somebody. I may be poor, but I am somebody. I may be on welfare, but I am somebody."

In 1976, Jackson established PUSH-Excel (PUSH for Excellence), which sought to stop the rise of vandalism, drug abuse, teenage pregnancy and drop-out rates in the inner-city school systems. Jackson made a tour of South Africa and the Middle East in 1979. He was photographed embracing the Palestine Liberation Organization's Yasir Arafat, and he promoted the PLO, two actions that would haunt Jackson in his bids for the presidency.

He announced his candidacy for the presidency on Nov. 3, 1983, after months of rumors.

Even though Jackson was endorsed by key black leaders such as Mayor Marion Barry of Washington, D.C., other members of the black political establishment worried Jackson's race would divide the Democratic Party and guarantee Ronald Reagan's re-election.

"What are we going to tell our children?" asked Richard Hatcher, mayor of Gary, Ind. "That a black man can't run for president?"

One of the media conversations may have cost him the race when Jackson referred to Jewish people as "hymies" and called New York City "Hymietown."

Jewish leaders were outraged. Although he made a formal apology, Jackson only received 5.3 percent of the vote during the ensuing New Hampshire primary. Even though he made a strong showing on Super Tuesday and other primaries, Walter Mondale eventually won the Democratic nomination for president, with Jackson finishing third.

Jackson wasn't the first black person to run for president. New York Rep. Shirley Chisholm ran a mostly symbolic race in 1972.

Jackson didn't stay out of politics for long, announcing his bid for the Democratic nomination in 1988, preaching the politics of economic parity across party lines.

Retooling his image after the '84 campaign, Jackson abandoned the rainbow coalition label, which eased his image in the minds of white people and moderates. He also was careful not to make any "Hymietown"-like remarks. The new image worked, as black voters almost unanimously voted for Jackson.

The nomination slipped out of Jackson's grasp as he finished second to Michael Dukakis.

Jackson has never served in public office and had several associations that analysts said hurt his chances in the primaries. Along with "Hymietown" and Yasir Arafat, Jackson has been allied with Black Muslim leader Louis Farrakhan and Fidel Castro.

He has been accused of opportunism and self-promotion.

A more serious complaint made by black leaders came when Jackson appeared on television the day after King was assassinated, wearing a bloodstained shirt. Jackson said he had held the dying King in his arms after he was shot. Witnesses of the shooting disputed this account at the time.

Protests aren't registered

Academic interference is sometimes a problem with public demonstrations, Beckom said. He said when classes are being interrupted by excessive noise, accommodations will be made for the protesters.

"We don't want to stop a person. But we want to allow classes to be held. We have moved demonstrators in the past when this occurs," he said.

Beckom said he is unaware of any groups that have registered to demonstrate when Jesse Jackson speaks at the Landon Lecture. But, he said, the Rev. Fred Phelps had expressed an interest in demonstrating.

K-State's Department of Physical Facilities in Dykstra Hall is the starting point for any group wanting to demonstrate on the campus.

"We're more the facilitator," said Edward Rice, assistant vice president for facilities. "We check with everyone on campus to make sure there are no extenuating problems."

Rice and Diane Novak, from the office of room scheduling and special services, both said no groups have registered to demonstrate.

K-State captures win behind DeCamp's 38 points

BRIAN ANDERSON
Collegian

Women's basketball coach Brian Agler said fans should not expect another performance like the one Shawnda DeCamp had Saturday afternoon in Bramlage Coliseum.

DeCamp, a transfer from Northeastern Oklahoma A&M, scored 38 points, including nine 3-pointers to give K-State a 69-56 victory over the Detroit-Mercy Titans.

"She shot the lights out," Agler said. "I don't think they thought she could shoot that well. They must have seen her last Sunday going two for 17 and didn't think she could shoot the ball.

"Our offense is team-oriented, even though it didn't look that way," he said.

DeCamp's 38 points tied her for first place for the most points scored in one game on the K-State scoring charts. She tied the scoring record with LeAnn Wilcox, who set the record Dec. 28, 1978.

The 38 points put DeCamp in a three-way tie for 23rd on the all-time Big Eight scoring charts for a single game. Her effort marks the most points scored by a conference player since Karen Jennings scored 39 points for Nebraska in February 1992.

"The offense is designed to set a lot of screens," said DeCamp, who went 14 of 31 in field goal attempts, including nine of 22 3-point attempts. "Tonight, they set a lot of screens to my side, and I was open."

The Wildcats (1-0) led 33-16 at halftime, with DeCamp scoring 20 points on six 3-pointers in 15 attempts.

The six 3-pointers tied a Big Eight record for the most in a half, and the 15 attempts broke a conference record of 10 attempts by Amy Stephens of Nebraska on Feb. 11, 1989 and Carin Stites of Oklahoma on Jan. 21, 1991.

K-State held Detroit to 19 percent from the field in the first half but allowed the Titans to shoot 42 percent and score 40 points in the second half.

"Our ladies came ready to play," Agler said. "We had one or two breakdowns in the first half. Our problem was mental toughness.

"You have to sustain it for 40 minutes. We didn't do that."

The Cats' lead gradually increased to 49-26 at the 13:57 mark of the second half. But Detroit then went on a 26-9 run in 10 minutes to cut the K-State margin to eight points.

Agler said Detroit pressured them in the second half.

"They controlled the tempo in the second half," he said. "We gave them easy opportunities to score. We didn't handle their press. We shot quickly — they rebounded and had 2-on-1 or 3-on-2 breaks. They were quite ready to play."

Lynn Holzman said the team knew they had to take control late in the game.

"We held our composure when they started to go spastic on us," Holzman said. "I felt we were doing it to ourselves. We just had to bear down and play hard."

K-State went on an 11-6 spurt in the last 3:30 of the game to hold off Detroit.

Agler said he thought his team did well despite giving up 40 points in the second half.

"We were lucky to have a lead," Agler said. "I thought our ladies played hard, but we've got to play with greater effort."

K-State takes the floor with a 7 p.m. tip-off tonight at Bramlage against Division II Missouri-Rolla.

Montana returns, guides Chiefs to 23-7 victory against Bills

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Even a less-than-perfect Joe Montana is better than no Joe at all.

So rusty from a three-week layoff that he dropped a center snap for the first time he could remember, Montana returned to Kansas City's lineup Sunday and threw two touchdown passes to lead the Chiefs past Buffalo 23-7.

"I didn't think I played that well," said Montana, who had missed three games after reinjuring his left hamstring on Oct. 31. "I felt a little pressure about not wanting to make bad plays after being out for a while. I'm sure people were watching for that."

Montana hit 18 of 32 passes for 208 yards and two touchdowns and his second interception as a Chief.

"I wasn't as sharp as I'd like to be," he said. "But fortunately, our defense played great and gave us opportunities."

The Chiefs (8-3) maintained their one-game lead over Denver in the AFC West and dropped the three-time AFC champion Bills (8-3) one game behind Miami in the AFC East.

"We ran into a buzzsaw," Buffalo linebacker Darryl Talley said. "They are playing extremely well."

Montana, who played only 14 of the Chiefs' first 40 quarters, was 10-for-17 in the first half, with one interception. But he was sharper after intermission while directing a seven-play, 80-yard march that gave the Chiefs a 17-7 lead. Four of his passes were either tipped or batted down at the line.

Montana hit Marcus Allen for an 18-yard TD in the first half and flipped a 1-yard score to a wide-open Keith Cash in the third. Nick Lowery added three field goals as the Chiefs, for the fifth straight year, avoided a second straight loss at home.

With 1,442 points, Lowery moved past Jim Turner for No. 4 on the NFL's all-time list.

Allen had 22 carries for 74 yards. Cornerbacks Dale Carter and Albert Lewis and 315-pound noseguard Dan Saleaumua all had interceptions on Kelly. The Bills, who came into the game with a plus-12 takeaway ratio, also lost a fumble and sustained four sacks.

CHIEFS ROUNDUP

- Joe Montana hit 18 of 32 passes for 208 yards and two touchdowns in his return to the lineup.
- After giving up 190 yards last week to Chicago, the Chiefs' defense surrendered a season-low 43 rushing yards to the Bills.

BASKETBALL

Golden Eagles sting Cats in opening game

DEREK SIMMONS
Collegian

For 16 minutes, the K-State men's basketball team was in control. But only 16 minutes.

The Cats surrendered a 30-27 halftime lead, eventually falling 74-60 to Southern Mississippi Saturday night in their season opener at Bramlage Coliseum.

The loss marked K-State's first season-opening setback since the 1983-84 campaign and snapped a streak of nine straight season-opening wins.

"I thought the first 16 minutes we got out and pressured them the way we should," Coach Dana Altman said. "After that it was just a total breakdown."

With 10:15 left in the opening period, Ron Lucas tied the game at 13-13. That bucket sparked a 9-0 run by the Cats, which put them up 22-13 with 6:08 remaining in the first half.

The Golden Eagles endured a five-minute spell without a field goal, but finally scored with 5:19 left in the first half, slicing their deficit to 22-16.

But Brian Henson's free throw and 3-pointer with 4:14 left in the half put the Cats on top 26-16. Deryl Cunningham added a free throw with 3:04 left, giving K-State an 11-point advantage.

"We were nervous and couldn't get settled down," Southern Mississippi coach M.K. Turk said of the first half. "K-State's defense had a lot to do with it also. They denied the passing lanes very well."

Southern Mississippi scored 11 points in the final 2:53 of the first stanza, making it a 30-27 game at the break.

The Golden Eagles started the second half where they left off in the first, reeling off nine-straight points. The 9-0 run was capped by Maurice Morris' bucket with 18:19 remaining and Southern Mississippi took the lead for good 36-30.

"We lost our composure in the second half," Altman said. "I thought with the veterans we have, that wouldn't happen, but it seemed like our veterans were just as guilty as some of the new guys."

K-State was down 57-45 with 7:48 left in the game and would get no closer than 11 points from Southern Mississippi during the final minutes.

"In the first half, we had emotion going," said point guard Anthony Beane, who led the Cats with 13 points. "I think we really came out ready to play. In the second half, we were kind of dead. You can't play basketball when you're dead. We have to understand that, and without any emotion we can't play ball.

"Southern Miss, to me, is a pretty good team. I like the way they play. I'm not taking anything from them, but I didn't think we played our best game."

The Cats shot just 32.3 percent from the field, while the Golden Eagles shot 47.5 percent. K-State had 20 turnovers and shot just 20 percent from 3-point range and 59.3 percent from the free-throw line.

Southern Mississippi's Glen Whisby led all scorers with 20 points, 12 in the second half. He also had seven rebounds and two blocked shots.

"In the second half we settled down," Whisby said. "As a team, we took advantage of the inside game. K-State is a good team. They played a great game."

Cunningham came within one rebound of tying his career-high 15. The senior also added 10 points, marking the sixth double-double of his career. Transfer Demond Davis scored 12 points and grabbed 13 rebounds.

"We didn't execute as well as we should have," Lucas said. "We just have to go back into practice and forget about this game and look to the future."

Save judging of breast size for others

Dear Cassandra,

This is in response to the letter printed in the Nov. 18 issue signed by Itchy and Scratchy. Although you, Cassandra, have already given this "person" a response, I thought I would give my opinion of him regarding the "pebbles" comment.

I would like to know how Itchy even decided to throw in the rude and immature comment about breast size in the first place. What did that have to do with the question of why people sometimes "adjust" in public.

Itchy is obviously a very sad individual who must judge females by the size of their breasts. Someone needs to clue him in. You can hardly judge someone by their body.

How about getting to know them for a change? I know this is probably a new concept to Itchy, but I thought I'd help him out a bit.

In conclusion, I have been dating a young woman for more than two years now. I have always had nothing but the most respect and love for her since the day I met her. She was judged on her intelligence and personality and definitely not her breast size.

I'm sure SOME men out there would not be interested in her because she lacks large breasts. However, it is probably the last trait I would judge her or any other female by.

He should try this.
Signed,
She's Small, I'm Satisfied

Dear Satisfied,

Groovy, man. Thanks for the letter.

Dear Cassandra,

Do you sleep in the nude?
Signed,
Yours In Love

Dear In Love,

MUSIC

'The Who' guitarist reflects for concert

Past glories and newest work performed on PBS

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — A million years ago, really more like 25, a rock group called The Who hit Chicago. The band's guitarist, Pete Townshend, was in fine fettle that night with his soaring squats and supple wrist through "Tommy." Later, he sacrificed his Gibson against a screaming amp to seal the experience.

Two days later, the hall where the foursome had played burned to the ground.

More time passed. Last spring "The Who's Tommy" became a lavishly produced, Tony Award-winning Broadway hit.

Meanwhile, Townshend, at 48 years old a certified rock elder, had come to want more for himself than playing pyrotechnic troubadour.

"I'd love to be able to tell myself that all I have to do for the rest of my life is write and perform songs," he said.

"But in music you deal in generalizations — the chase, the seduction, the melodrama of relationships — and never with the subtleties. As an adult, as I grow, one of the things that excites me is the specificity of theater, the subtlety that's possible there."

The widening gap between this rock star's past glories and his quest into the unknown is reflected, not to mention explored, in his newest work. "Great Performances" will form the heart of a Townshend concert from 9 to 10:30 p.m. Wednesday on PBS.

Taped in August at the Brooklyn Academy of Music, the set kicks off with Who favorites before turning to "PsychoDerelict," a narrowly autobiographical but deeply personal musical play examining the interdependence of performer, fans and media.

Staged with Townshend, a band and a trio of actors, the piece has 11 new songs as well as instrumental passages, visuals and dialogue.

A 70-minute work-in-progress that began its evolution with radio workshops and eventually may emerge as a 2-1/2-hour extravaganza, "PsychoDerelict" becomes an apt companion to the story-and-song rock opera Townshend invented a quarter-century ago with "Tommy" and experimented with on Who albums even before that.

Even beyond the music it pioneered, Townshend's band was like no other. Rooted in the British working class, The Who was also boosted by the mystical. The group was an unlikely mix of sunshine and bile, simultaneously devout yet self-mocking, hyperkinetic and searingly vaudevillian.

"There was a certain ridiculousness in our presentation," Townshend said. "What allowed us to get away with it was that we were a really great machine, a terrific rock engine."

Although that great machine shut down a decade ago, Townshend didn't, and the lad who forged a timeless screw-you message to his seniors ("Hope I die before I get old") whirs full-tilt in middle age.

Townshend wore a peacoat, turtle-neck sweater and peace symbol on a cord around his neck at the interview. He was balding, and his whiskers were gray. But Townshend was still at the wheel of the Magic Bus, an avatar-bloke who still can see for miles.

"Rock is so age-obsessed," he observed. "It attends to that moment when you first realize that your life is your own, and only your own, and you have to decide where you're going, and how, and what you're going to take with you."

Once that journey begins, rock mourns as well as celebrates the passage. Townshend, like any reflective adult, does, too.

"I think I had more direction back then, even though I didn't know it," he said. "I think the direction that I had then got me to the place that I am now."

COLLEGIAN'S DAILY DESTINIES By Gypsy Rose

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Celebrate life by opening a bottle of champagne and listening to "Deck the Halls" with your friends.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Give up on dieting because Christmas cookies are lurking in the kitchen.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): You don't have much of a social life. So purchase season basketball tickets and get out of the house once in a while.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Put a little cheer in your life by decorating a Christmas tree for your room. If you don't have decorations, use your roomies' undies and socks.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Spend some time thinking about whether you want to continue the relationship you're in. Is it worth the effort?

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Keep in touch with your high-school buddies by sending out Christmas cards. They miss you.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Share in the Christmas spirit by visiting a small town bar and talking with the locals.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Take time to listen to Rev. Jackson today. His words will be well worth the effort.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Help your roomies get over their colds by splitting a bottle of Southern Comfort with them.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Tired of turkey sandwiches? Try turkey omelets or shredded turkey tacos. They are a popular item on the light menu in Mexico.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Don't worry about those long term papers too much. Just type them in a bigger font size.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Click your heels three times and wish you would vanish into the Land of Jobs.

Racial slur found in hall

Distress caused by message left in study center

KRISTEN WELBORN
Collegian

The Minority Engineering Study Center in Seaton Hall was victim to a racial slur sometime between 8 p.m. Nov. 12 and noon Nov. 13.

Karen Martin, director of the Minority Engineering Program, said the study center recently was remodeled.

Someone or some group wrote a derogatory statement on the blackboard that contained this message: "Z.O.G. Jews, Niggers, Arabs, We despise your tolerances. We will not stand for you no more. Free America! WHITE POWER Aryan 'The Crushers.'"

The message was written in yellow chalk, but the center only contains white chalk. Martin called the police and filed a report.

"I'm appalled at what was written there," Martin said.

The racial slur was a source of distress to many students involved in the Minority Engineering Program.

"I took part in putting that student center together, and I am deeply disappointed in seeing the center used in that fashion," Khris House, freshman in architectural engineering, said.

"The point is, the derogatory statement that was written is just another stab in the backs of minorities on this campus, as well as around the world," House said.

Felicia McKoy, freshman in computer science, said she agreed.

"Before the message, I used to wonder what everybody felt about everyone else being together. In the back of my mind, I wondered if anyone had a problem," McKoy said.

"It distresses me, makes me feel threatened and makes me more keen on watching my back. I was upset, very disturbed. You name it, I felt it," McKoy said.

Freshmen and transfer engineering students representing minority groups are encouraged to enroll in a minority engineering symposium class.

"This helps build a sense of community and a network system for students," Martin said.

Minorities were not encouraged to enter fields of study emphasizing math and science until 20 years ago, Martin said.

"In the early '70s, instructors realized minorities weren't graduating from mathematics and science programs. The government held the summit and initiated minority engineering programs," she said.

The center serves as a recruiting process, enrolls and encourages minority students to explore career options in the field of engineering.

Blacks, Hispanics and Native Americans are in engineering and science, Martin said.

The study center is available for student use 24 hours a day, seven days a week.

"We don't live in a perfect society, but we have to be accepting of another individual," Martin said.

"We may not share the same beliefs or the same background, but we should not profess one race better than the other," she said.

Party throws support to Colosio for president

ASSOCIATED PRESS

MEXICO CITY — The party that has governed Mexico for more than 60 years named public works chief Luis Donaldo Colosio as its presidential candidate Sunday, virtually assuring he will be the country's next leader.

The announcement by the Institutional Revolutionary Party's national chairman, Fernando Ortiz Arana, ended months of speculation on who was going to be its standard bearer.

The party, known by its Spanish initials as PRI, has not lost a presidential election since it was founded 64 years ago.

Colosio, 43, is a native of northwestern Sonora state and a close friend of President Carlos Salinas de Gotari. Both carried out post-graduate studies in the United States. Colosio holds masters and doctoral degrees in urban economic development from the University of Pennsylvania.

"Luis Donaldo Colosio is the PRI member who, because of his social vocation and party experience, is the candidate of unity and of hope of all Mexicans to overcome old backwardness and new challenges of the future," Ortiz said in his brief announcement.

In the next few days, Colosio is to resign his Cabinet post as Secretary of Social Development, a job Salinas created for him out of the old Urban Development Department two years ago, to enter the campaign.

The election is Aug. 24, 1994.

He faces a formidable challenge from Cuauhtemoc Cardenas of the Democratic Revolutionary Party, who nearly carried away the election that put Salinas into power in 1988.

Colosio was coordinator of Salinas' campaign, then for about two years the president entrusted him with reforming the party. His aim, he said at the time, was to make it competitive in a more open political atmosphere.

It is part of the president's effort to improve Mexico's tarnished image abroad, especially now that the country has entered into a North American Free Trade Agreement with Canada and the United States.

Salinas, meanwhile, has been pushing for political reform, hoping to do away with favoritism and corruption and opening the field to give opposition people greater access to public jobs.

But opposition party leaders have been saying he has not done enough.

A tall man with a shock of frizzled hair and a bushy mustache, Colosio appears shy most of the time. But he is considered to be a strong public speaker and a solid administrator.

He directs the huge Solidarity Program, which has built roads and brought electricity and running water to remote communities. Critics describe the program as a giant patronage machine designed to perpetuate the PRI.

He was born Feb. 10, 1950, in the small Sonora town of Magdalena de Kino. His father, Luis Colosio Fernandez, was a rancher. He is married to Laura Riojas Reyes, an economist.

British government admits it spoke with IRA

ASSOCIATED PRESS

BELFAST, Northern Ireland — The British government's reluctant admission that it has secretly communicated with the Irish Republican Army has cast a shadow over months of peacemaking efforts for Northern Ireland.

An influential Protestant leader demanded British Prime Minister John Major's resignation. Sinn Fein, the IRA's political ally, said the contacts were more substantial than the British government was willing to admit.

The secrecy surrounding the contacts underscores Britain's fear that publicity could blow apart the peace efforts.

Major is scheduled to meet his Irish counterpart, Albert Reynolds, next month in Dublin, where they hope to reach agreement toward peace.

But Northern Ireland's Protestant majority already suspects Britain may try to cut a deal with the Catholic-based IRA. British agents seized a record cache of arms last week intended for Protestant paramilitaries, and Protestant politicians said the seizure showed the paramilitaries were preparing for war.

The IRA wants Northern Ireland to unite with the Irish Republic, which is predominantly Catholic. The province's Protestant community supports continued British rule, fearing it will lose political clout in what is primarily a Catholic nation.

At least 3,100 people have been killed in 23 years of sectarian violence surrounding British rule in Northern Ireland.

After weeks of denials, the British government admitted Sunday it has had secret communications with the IRA in hopes of persuading the outlawed group to end its violent campaign against the British.

The disclosure was made by Sir Patrick Mayhew, Britain's leading official for Northern Ireland, who said Britain had long used intermediaries as contacts with Sinn Fein.

The government was forced to concede the existence of the contacts after the Observer newspaper published on Sunday the text of Mayhew's instructions to an emissary who met Sinn Fein deputy leader Martin McGuinness in March.

A Hume-Adams joint statement in September has prompted a series of meetings between the Irish and British governments.

CATEGORIES

To help you find what you are looking for, the classified ads have been arranged by category and sub-category. All categories are marked by one of the large images, and sub-categories are preceded by a number designation.

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD

Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.

Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.

Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

Worker safety discussed at bazaar

KIM DILLON
Collegian

Students in Advanced Safety Principles put together displays and demonstrations on different topics, including tips for home and occupational safety, for a Safety Bazaar.

The Safety Bazaar took place Nov. 22 in the Union Courtyard.

"The whole project is to open up to campus different aspects of safety training," said Jeff Kerbs, graduate student in industrial engineering and member of group whose presentation was about Carpal Tunnel Syndrome.

Kerbs said his group was trying to give general information about Carpal Tunnel Syndrome in four- to five-minute demonstrations. This information included the causes, symptoms, prevention and treatment of Carpal Tunnel Syndrome.

Ken Ward, graduate student in industrial engineering and member of a group whose presentation was about eye safety, said they were dealing with safety in two forms — first with workers, who are the main concern, and secondly the legal aspects, to protect companies from liability from the safety aspect.

Larry Satzler, graduate student in industrial engineering and member of a group whose presentation was about chemical safety, said his group was trying to show chemicals in the household that can be harmful.

Paula Hinnen, graduate student in industrial engineering and member of a group whose presentation was about back safety, said her group was talking about the important things to remember before lifting.

Ears have a natural tendency change naturally through aging without damage from the work place, said Dave Wilson, graduate student in industrial engineering and member of a group whose presentation was about hearing safety.

Wilson's group talked about the levels where different forms of protection are needed and what each type of protection was best for.

Most of the groups developed informational material for participants to take with them.

NEWS DIGEST

▶Governor, cabinet resign after scandal

BERLIN (AP) — The Cabinet of an east German state resigned Sunday due to a scandal over excessive pay for west German politicians sent to help govern the formerly communist part of the country.

Werner Muench, governor of Saxony-Anhalt, denied accusations that he had received $117,000 in excessive pay in the last two years but announced he and his 10 ministers were all quitting.

The scandal threatens politicians from Chancellor Helmut Kohl's party, the conservative Christian Democrats.

It could increase public distrust of politics as Germany approaches local, state and national elections in 1994.

With Germans being required to tighten their belts amid recession and the high costs of reunification, voters are especially suspicious of politicians' salaries.

The Holidays

All the faces of Santa Claus

St. Nicholas' rich history stretches way beyond delivering gifts through chimneys

Around the world the most familiar face during the holiday season is St. Nicholas, or Santa Claus.

People of all ages eagerly anticipate visits from Santa each Christmas Eve.

On that night, traveling on his gift-laden sleigh drawn by reindeer, Santa arrives to deliver gifts to little boys and girls.

It is believed St. Nick was born in Patara, a town near the eastern Mediterranean coast, which today would be in Turkey. At age 19, St. Nick became a priest. Throughout his life as a priest, and then as the Bishop of Myra, St. Nick performed many good deeds and miracles.

He is known as the patron saint of many different peoples, including mariners and children, according to the World Book Encyclopedia.

When St. Nick was a young man, his parents died, and they left him a great deal of money. Instead of using the wealth to live as a rich man, he secretly gave his money to the needy.

One of the many stories about St. Nick's generosity involved three young maidens and their father.

St. Nick discovered three maidens were without dowries, thus they were unable to marry.

During the night St. Nick went to the family's home and tossed a bag of gold through their window. Soon after, the eldest daughter married.

Again St. Nick returned to the home and tossed another bag of gold through the family's window for the second daughter, allowing her to marry.

These secret generous gifts piqued the father's curiosity. He decided to hide near his third daughter's window so that he could catch the secret gift-giver.

On the night St. Nick approached the window and tossed in the third bag of gold, the father caught him.

He thanked St. Nick and told him that he saved the family.

He was quite embarrassed and asked the father not to give away his secret.

The father agreed and did not tell anyone about St. Nick's secret gifts until long after he was dead, according to the World Book Encyclopedia and "Saint Nicholas, Life and Legend."

The legends of St. Nick as a gift-bearing man were probably derived from this story.

Today in the United States, the man we know as Santa Claus was originally brought here by Dutch settlers.

When the Dutch first sailed to America, on the front of their ships were figures of St. Nick or Sinterklaas, according to The World Book Encyclopedia.

In the spirit of Christmas and St. Nick, Manhattan's College Avenue United Methodist Church has had a service of decoration during Advent, the celebration of the coming of Christ's birth, for the past 22 years, pastor Nancy Gammel said.

During the service, St. Nick comes down the aisle distributing potatoes. This tradition comes directly from the Dutch, said Mildred Bradley, church historian and author of the service of decoration.

When Holland belonged to Spain there was a great famine. Spain sent a bishop by ship to Holland to aid the Dutch.

After arriving in Holland, in the tradition of St. Nick, the Bishop rode throughout the country on a white horse and gave out potatoes to the starving Dutch, Bradley said.

"The Santa Claus that we know today has evolved through the melting pot, and we still embrace the tradition of gift-giving without even knowing it," she said.

Also in Holland on Saint Nicholas' Eve, the day before the celebration of his birth on Dec. 6, children leave out their shoes and place either hay, carrots or straw for St. Nick's white horse.

If the children are considered well-behaved, in place of the feed they will find candy in their shoes.

If the children are bad, the feed will remain in the shoes along with a whipping stick, according to "Christmas in Ritual and Tradition."

The Dutch St. Nick that was brought to America appeared as a tall, thin, dignified man who wore a bishop's robe and rode a white horse.

In 1809, Santa Claus was reinvented as a stout, jolly man who rode over the rooftops of homes in a wagon full of presents, according to the writings of American author Washington Irving.

In 1863 a visual transformation of St. Nick occurred. The Santa Claus image that we recognize today is credited to American cartoonist Thomas Nast.

In Nast's drawings, which appeared in Harper's Weekly, Santa had a white beard, a sleigh pulled by reindeer, and stockings filled with toys, according to the World Book Encyclopedia.

No matter what Santa looks like, the children of the world hold him close to their hearts.

Three 7-year-old students in Richard Van Nevel's second grade class at Riley County Grade School expressed their feelings about Santa Claus.

"He's a really nice man who gives toys to children," Meagan Smith said.

Kyle Bohnenblust said he would like anything Santa brought him.

"He thinks I'm special — that's why he brings me lots of toys," Mariya Vaughan said.

He sprang to his sleigh, to his team gave a whistle, and way they all flew like the down of a thistle. But I heard him exclaim, ere he drove out of sight, "Merry Christmas to all, and to all a good night!"

Flood deters some tree growers

SUSAN HATTERBERG
Collegian

Summer floods in Manhattan have ruined some Christmas-tree farms around the Manhattan area. Although some received no damage, others were wiped out almost completely.

"We lost 85 to 90 percent of our trees," said Joe Johns, owner of what was going to be Blue River Pines.

Johns said the business was scheduled to open next year, but the floods have set them back four to five years.

"We were in our sixth growing season. It's a seven-year process to grow them before they are ready to harvest for Christmas," Johns said.

The floods had a bad effect on the farm, even though the business had not sold any trees yet, Johns said.

"It's not like we were making money and then we are not — it just set us back," Johns said.

Johns said the flood destroyed a lot of intermediate and smaller trees.

"We will probably be open next year to sell the big trees that did not get destroyed, but it is hard to operate when we're only open for one year," Johns said.

Johns said the business has not decided if it will replant in March or April.

Johns had planted Scotch Pine, White Pine and Austrian Pine trees.

Other Christmas-tree farms will be open for the holiday season, said Bill Loucks, tree-planting program leader for K-State's extension forestry.

"We have gobs of trees to be sold. There is not concern at all," Loucks said.

"Christmas-tree growers have 200,000 trees in Kansas. They say there are too many."

Nationally, Christmas trees are over-produced and in good supply.

Loucks said there are about 350,000 trees sold to people in Kansas.

Not all trees sold in Kansas are grown in Kansas.

"Kansas receives a lot of imports, mostly from the lake states like Montana, Michigan, Minnesota and Wisconsin," Loucks said.

Most of the trees sold in Kansas are Scotch Pine.

They are followed by Austrian Pine, Eastern White Pine and Virginia Pine, Loucks said.

Big Lakes Festival of Trees has community support

LAURIE DOANE
Collegian

A record-breaking crowd attended the eighth annual Festival of Trees auction Saturday evening in the Colony Square building at 555 Poyntz Ave.

More than 400 people attended the auction of decorated Christmas trees and craft items, Ilene Adams, public relations director at Big Lakes Developmental Center, said.

"I'm so pleased with the community support, Adams said. "There were lots of new people here and the enthusiasm was just tremendous."

All 98 items, including 18 Christmas trees, ceramics, center pieces, wall hangings and wreaths were donated by community clubs, stores, banks and individuals to raise money for Big Lakes.

Big Lakes Developmental Center is a non-profit facility that provides people with developmental disabilities job training, housing, supported employment and work service, Adams said.

Although total proceeds from the event will not be available until Dec. 1, Adams said the items sold for anywhere from $27.50 to $400. A mix of individuals and businesses bought the items, Adams said.

Participants and individuals who viewed the trees during the week voted the Konza Prarie Quilters Guild Christmas tree the best of the show.

Big Lakes clients chose the American Business Women's Association's tree, titled Christmas in the Land of Oz, as their favorite tree.

The Best Artistic Design was awarded to the tree decorated by Hair Experts Design Team.

Many new faces were present at the evening's festivities, said Tammy Bluhm, vice president of administration and finance at Big Lakes.

Students use different ways of travel to get home

LORI ARMER
Collegian

Many students who live close to Manhattan opt to drive their cars home or carpool with friends for winter break. However, students who live in other states must find alternative methods of beating the rush.

"I usually have to make plans three months in advance for my plane tickets home to Chicago," said Noelle Turpinat, junior in French and secondary education.

"I'm very family oriented and miss them a lot. I don't get to go home and relax like other people, though. I'm always having to think about how I'm going to get from one place to another."

Turpinat said she usually only goes home for Christmas and some summers. When she can't, she will stay with friends or family in Kansas City.

International students, as well, are only able to go home at certain times of the year and usually face lengthy travels.

"I'm going home to Argentina for break," Laura Soiza, graduate student in modern languages, said. "I use the Travelers Express shuttle to get to KCI because I don't have a car, and neither do my friends.

"I spend three hours on the plane to Miami, and then nine hours to Buenos Aires. I usually go home only for Christmas and the summer holidays."

Travelers Express, the Kansas City International Airport shuttle, is an alternative that Turpinat and Soiza, as well as other students, use as part of their travels.

The shuttle is a busy system around the holiday season for this area, Susan Furney, co-owner, said.

"Around the end of the semester and holiday season, many students travel by using the shuttle," Furney said.

A similar airport shuttle service, KCI Roadrunner, takes passengers from Topeka, Manhattan and Junction City to Kansas City.

"A lot of people use it so they don't have to drive and worry about weather conditions," Susan Brown, Roadrunner phone operator, said.

Bus lines like Greyhound-Trailways Lines out of Junction City are also popular alternatives for students wishing to travel home.

Seats are available on a first-come, first-serve seating arrangement, Jeff Fender, Greyhound-Trailways employee, said.

"A majority of military use our service, but since the Manhattan bus station closed, we get a lot of students," he said.

Students interested in driving who wish to share expenses or are without a car opt for using the ride board on the first floor of the Union.

To use the ride board, a student either fills out a yellow slip for a rider wanted or a white slip for a driver wanted and places it on the ride board.

Angela Ochoa, freshman undecided, is one student who is using the service to find a ride home to Tucson, Ariz.

"I saw it there, and it seemed like a good idea, so I thought that I'd try it," Ochoa said. "It's very expensive to go back and forth, so Christmas will be my first time home."

Although expense and length of travel time seem to be the disadvantages for traveling during this time of year, Soiza said she doesn't really have any problems with traveling and living so far away.

"I miss my friends and family, but they know I enjoy it here, so it's OK," she said.

HOLIDAYS IN THE HALLS

Students interested in staying in the halls over winter break may stay in Edwards Hall or Marlatt Hall for $4 a night and must spend a minimum of $10. The students are put in individual vacant rooms in the halls.

About 100 students usually stay for Thanksgiving, and 200 stay for Christmas break.

The deadline to sign up for residence during the Christmas holiday is Dec. 9. The halls are also available for intersession before summer school and at the end of the summer.

Forget about how many shopping days are left until Christmas, here's what to buy

TARA FOSTER
Collegian

Not sure what to get your wife, your brother, your child or your pet this Christmas?

Here are some of the most popular items this holiday season, suggested by a few Manhattan merchants.

Darrel Hesselius, manager of K-G Men's Store, said wrinkle-free, cotton slacks by Haggar is one of the hottest items for men this Christmas season.

They come in all colors, including hunter green, oyster, black, navy blue and khaki.

"It's a slack that has been treated at the factory and doesn't need ironing," Hesselius said.

He said a handsome garment to wear with the pants is a denim shirt.

Hesselius said they come in jewel-toned colors, such as spruce, purple and bright blue.

"They are a real deep color," he said.

Michaela Turner, sales associate of Lowman's Men's Store, said the store offers a wide variety of popular attire for Christmas.

"We have cotton and flannel boxers with big prints," she said.

The prints range from donkeys to pigs and are a great stocking-stuffer idea, she said.

The store also offers Ralph Lauren sport novelty items, like golf tees and balls, baseballs, and basketballs, she said.

Elynn Meyer, of Dillard's Ladies Moderate department, said silk blouse in all styles and colors are a favorite item for women this holiday season.

Brocade, embroidered and crocheted vests and stirrup pants are also popular, she said.

At Maurices, Manager Cheryl Holle said vests are a great gift for both men and women.

She said the store has many styles, including leather andSouthwest prints. For the holiday season, they have velvet vests with glitter.

They also carry hooded and flannel sweatshirts. If the sweatshirts are not warm enough, a person may opt for a Columbia jacket.

"The jackets come in lots of different styles and lots of different liners," she said.

In the area of appliances, Butterfields Etc. Manager Lori Sharp said espresso machines are practical gifts to buy.

"A lot of people go out to get espresso. It's a lot less expensive if you buy one yourself and make it yourself," she said.

The Palace has different types of home-decoration gifts, such as ceramic houses with lights and accessories to go with them.

"They are collectibles," Bryan Taylor, manager, said.

The store sells a wide assortment of calendars.

Taylor said the most popular one is the Far Side page-a-day.

The Palace also offers gift baskets, candies and balloons.

If you have a child on your shopping list, the X-Men action figures are a popular item for boys, Pete Taylor, manager of the toy. department at Wal-Mart, said. For girls, the "Aladdin" merchandise is popular.

Taylor said a fun gift for the college student is the "Cheers" board game.

The cards in the board game are named "Cliffisms" and "Normisms."

The object of the game is to answer the questions on the cards correctly and advance toward collecting wooden tokens.

When shopping for your family members, do not forget to buy something special for your dog or cat.

For the holiday season, Petland manager Bev Stillwagon said the store is offering animal-safe teddy bears.

These toys are great for dogs to chew on and are more durable than a stuffed animal designed for people, she said.

■ See related story on page 6

For cat lovers, Stillwagon said the store has an item for cats — stockings with strings and mice attached to them. People can put these stockings on their fingers and give their cats a little holiday entertainment.

Manhattan businesses predict successful season

Music, clothing merchants look forward to recovery

DANI JOHNSTON
Collegian

Local stores are looking forward to a busier Christmas this year than last year.

"Sales were pretty good last year," said Doug Kohlhase, senior in social sciences and employee of Streetside Records. He said store employees expect an even better year this year.

"A lot of people buy music for their friends, brothers and sisters before they go home for Christmas," he said.

"A lot of people also buy gift certificates, so we get a lot of gift certificates after Christmas," Kolhase said.

This year, Streetside Records will have a new system, in which a person can get a card they can use to preview compact discs before buying them. "It's all a free service — just fill out an application," Kohlhase said. "You will also get monthly newsletters."

The music business is not the only business that expects a busy Christmas.

Ballard's in Aggieville is looking forward to a busy year.

"K-State T-shirts and sweatshirts are real big for Christmas this year," Kathy Reno, assistant manager of Ballard's, said.

"Purple pride is back because of the K-State football team, and that will increase sales this year."

"The second biggest thing besides K-State would be Russell sweats," Reno said. "We already have stock, and we're ready to go."

Sports Page, a sports store in Manhattan Town Center, is expecting a much better Christmas this year than last year.

"Last year, sales were the same as the year before. There wasn't an increase due to the opening of another sports store in the mall," Robert Koemgsman, manager of Sports Page, said.

"We do expect an increase in sales this year," he said. "We're selling more K-State this year because of the team."

For students who are interested in Christmas gifts that are not sports-oriented, clothing stores in the mall are prepared for shoppers.

"Our company had a record-breaker year last year, and we hope to go above and beyond that this year," Darah Eichem, sales and area manager of Brass Buckle in the mall, said.

"We are getting stock in every day, and people started shopping a month ago," Eichem said.

"People spare no expense when it comes to Christmas. Parents will break down and buy those Pepe jeans their son or daughter have been wanting."

Mandra Hines, manager of Merry Go Round, is looking for good things to happen this Christmas.

"Since the flood happened this summer, we expect the recovery to happen this Christmas," Hines said.

"The amount of merchandise we are receiving is now increasing, and we are expecting a lot more merchandise to come in during the next few weeks," Hines said.

Many seasonal activies planned for Manhattan

MICHELLE SCHROEDER
Collegian

Several Christmas activities are available in the Manhattan area for those who want to share the Christmas spirit.

A community-wide effort to collect food is one project that has already started.

The Mayor's Holiday Tree Program has a goal of collecting 125,000 pounds of food for the local families in need of assistance in the Manhattan area. The program will be collecting until Dec. 31.

To celebrate a time of giving, the community can unite at the tree-lighting ceremony which will take place at 6 p.m. Dec. 6 in Triangle Park.

"Every year there has never been anyone turned away for a holiday basket that lives in Riley County. Absolutely everyone is served," Shirley Bramhall, director of the program, said.

The participation rate is high this year.

"It's a marvelous community. When there's a need, the community just rises to the occasion and meets the need," she said.

To support the Mayor's Holiday Tree, TCI of Kansas is offering reduced rates for cable subscribers for collecting $5 worth of nonperishable food.

The Manhattan Town Center is also sponsoring events for the holiday season. The festivities started before Thanksgiving and will run until Friday, Dec. 24.

A Holiday Music Festival will feature daily shows from area schools, choirs, churches, dance troupes and solo artists.

There will also be free collectors items given to shoppers for certain amounts of purchases.

"If someone is to redeem $100 of Manhattan Town Center receipts dated Nov. 26 through Dec. 24 at the customer service desk, they receive their free collectors ornament," Shannon Maddux, advertising and marketing director at Manhattan Town Center, said.

In addition, the mall is sponsoring a Light of Life campaign to help the Homecare and Hospice services who provide health care to people in the community who are unable to pay.

A tree made out of poinsettias with white doves will decorate the entrance of JCPenney.

Contributors can add a light to the tree with a $10 donation and place their name on the display.

The Sunset Zoo is adding a new twist to their holiday events this year by sponsoring a holiday light festival. WILDlight Wonderland will use 40,000 feet of light to decorate the zoo.

Food pantries, transient shelters offer alternatives

CRYSTAL GOERING
Collegian

For the less fortunate, the holiday season is not always something to celebrate, but Manhattan homeless and low-income families are getting the help they need from a wide range of services.

The Manhattan Emergency Shelter is one program helping to meet the needs of people who, for one reason or another, cannot support themselves.

Sonja Redmon, executive director of the shelter, said about eight to 10 individuals stay in the shelter each night.

"These are people who may never make a lot of money or get a college degree," she said. "The person just doesn't have any place to go in town."

Residents who stay in the shelter are also counseled on subjects such as life skills, job readiness, budgeting, nutrition and personal hygiene.

"The training they receive will really help people to be self-sufficient. We do a good job here," Redmon said.

Mostly single males in their 20s to 30s stay at the shelter, with the longest stay being one to two weeks. A new transient shelter has also been opened, under the direction of the Manhattan Emergency Shelter, for people who need to stay for months at a time, Redmon said.

She said Manhattan does a good job of serving its homeless and transient population's needs.

"It's not an easy issue to address. Not everything is covered, but this community does a good job."

Even if a family has a place to live, it does not necessarily mean they have food to eat.

Food vouchers are distributed by the Red Cross to those who can prove they are financially qualified. The vouchers may be exchanged for food at participating churches and the Flint Hills Breadbasket.

Shirley Bramhall, director of the Breadbasket, said she has confidence in its ability to feed one in five families who earn moderate to low income and might use the services.

"I think we have the systems in place and running without a glitch," she said.

Bramhall said without community and University support the Breadbasket would not be able to serve as many of the hungry.

"I feel Manhattan fills the need when they see it," she said. "They make a difference."

Margaret Freshnock, food pantry coordinator for the First Lutheran Church, said menus are carefully prepared in order to give a good nutritional base. Fresh foods, vegetables, peanut butter and soup are all included.

"In years past, I've been worried about the holidays and not having enough food. This year I'm really pleased, though — it seems like we have more and more food coming in," she said.

"But there is always a need for food. There are a lot of single mothers with children and single males.

"They work for minimum wage and just can't make it."

Chanukah celebrated over holiday season

Jewish holiday celebrates miracle of lights

KIM DILLON
Collegian

During the holiday season Christmas is not the only holiday celebrated — Chanukah is also observed.

Chanukah is a festival of lights celebrated in the Jewish religion.

This year Chanukah begins on Dec. 8. Sometimes it begins early in December and sometimes later in December because of the way the Hebrew calendar is set up.

"In Jewish history there was a time the Syrians were ruling over the Jews, and they had tried to make the Jews follow their beliefs and to desecrate the Jewish temples and forbid people worshiping as they wanted," Deborah Fedder, B'nai B'rith Hillel coordinator on campus, said.

"In 165 BCE, before the common era, a group of Jews who were fighting against this won a victory. The family who led this revolt were the Maccabees," Fedder said.

After the victory, the family returned to the holy temple in Jerusalem, Fedder said.

In the temple there was only one vial of sacramental oil, enough to burn for one day, according to "A Chanukah Primer."

Miraculously the oil stayed lit for eight days, Fedder said.

Chanukah continued the fire-lighting in the form of candle-lighting, according to "A Chanukah Primer."

The victory over tyranny, their ability to worship as they pleased, and the oil that lasted eight days started being celebrated as a holiday, Fedder said.

This is a home-centered holiday, while other holidays are centered around the synagogue, Fedder said.

A traditional game played by children is the dreidel. The dreidel is a spinning top with four sides on top, each side with a letter. N, G, H and S are the Hebrew letters, and the English translation is "a great miracle happened there," Fedder said.

She also said every night for eight nights families light one more candle on a candelabra called a Menorah.

Menorahs do not have to be any particular shape or made of a specific material.

Another Chanukah tradition is to give small gifts each of the eight nights.

Caron Pollak, member of B'nai B'rith Hillel, lived in England until she was 28 years old, when she moved to Israel for five years. She came to the United States in August this year with her husband.

Pollak said the Chanukah traditions in the three countries do not differ much.

In England a traditional food eaten during Chanukah is called latkes or potato pancakes, Pollak said. In Israel a traditional food is sufganiyot, which are like donuts, she said.

"We're hoping to celebrate with the students," Pollak said.

FIRE SAFETY TIPS FOR THE HOLIDAY SEASON

Holiday Lighting

Take care when burning candles. Be sure they are kept well away from decorations or other combustible materials. Don't place candles where pets could knock them over. Never use candles to decorate Christmas trees!

When decorating with lights, be sure to purchase only those labeled by a testing laboratory.

Don't overload electrical outlets, and always unplug all the lights before leaving the house or going to sleep.

Holiday Parties

Decorate only with flame-retardant or noncombustible materials. Provide guests with large, deep ashtrays and check them frequently.

Wait until the next morning before emptying ashtays.

Kitchen Fire Safety

Cooking is the leading cause of home fires and home fire injuries in the U.S.

Wear tight-fitting clothes when cooking. Loose clothes can be ignited by hot burners.

Never leave the kitchen when something is cooking on the stove and always turn the pot handles in.

Don't overload electrical outlets, and don't use appliances with frayed or cracked wires. Don't use electrical appliances in or around water.

Other Holiday Fire Safety

Choose a fresh Christmas tree, and put it in a stand designed not to tip over. Place the tree well away from heat sources and exits, and water it constantly. If you plan to hang stockings on your fireplace, don't burn fires in it.

Choose holiday gifts wisely, passing up those that could be highly flammable.

Students strive to make inexpensive gifts

LORI ARMER
Collegian

The holiday season is the time of giving to those we love, but it can also be the season of despair for unemployed college students.

Love can only stretch as far as the depths of the pockets allow. For this reason, many students search far and wide to find the best bargains.

"I'm not buying Christmas presents this year," Jenny Jaynes, sophomore in pre-veterinary medicine, said. "I have no money, no job, and I just balanced my checkbook."

Homemade gifts can be alternative to expensive, store-bought gifts. Stores such as Ben Franklin specialize in making these types of gifts possible.

"Homemade gifts are popular partly because of the economy and partly because crafters enjoy making them," Lisa Hall, buyer for Ben Franklin, said. "It's giving away a part of yourself. Also, it's cheaper to make rather than buy a finished product."

Popular gifts this year include making ornaments and making decorative hair bows for girls, Hall said.

Children can buy Rexlace, which is a narrow plastic string, at five cents per yard, for weaving bracelets, necklaces and key chains.

Many students agree homemade gifts are the best way to keep from going into debt during the holiday season.

Some common gifts include cross-stitching pillows, decorating picture frames, making flower pots with dried flowers and making bookmarks and Christmas ornaments.

"I make a lot of my presents because I can and because of cost," Jane Slind, senior in human ecology, said. "It makes me feel good when I accomplish something that people like."

Slind said the presents she has made in the past include fabric wreaths, padded photo albums, Christmas chocolates for friends and Christmas aprons for her mom and her boyfriend's mom.

Other students have made their homemade gifts into long-standing traditions.

"Every year since eighth grade I have made an ornament for my mom," Megan Bolinder, sophomore in secondary education, said. "Last year I calligraphied gold paint on porcelain bells for everyone, and I think I might make that a tradition. It's something they can have for a long time."

Some large families draw names to help cut costs.

"We draw names on my mom's side of the family mostly because there are 10 grandkids, and instead of each family buying gifts, you only buy one thing," Kelli Schram, junior in secondary education and English, said. "The only people that buy for everyone are grandparents because they're grandparents, and that's their job."

Schram said she buys presents for her family but usually buys Christmas cards for friends.

"We're all in college, and we're all poor, so it's kind of understood," she said. "I make presents for friends when they are something significant. Goofy little inside jokes make it more fun."

Schram said personalized items that reflect things you have shared with a person can make special gifts.

"Making a mixed tape of songs that have meaning to you or colleagues and scrapbooks of things important to both of you make the best gifts," she said.

Some students said they feel homemade gifts aren't always the best route to go, however.

"I usually buy my gifts, but homemade gifts usually mean a lot more, unless of course they're ugly," Jen Levell, sophomore undecided, said.

Jaynes said the quality of the homemade gift depends on the creator.

"I'm not creative enough to make gifts," she said. "Money is always a good gift, though."

Levell said she agreed practical gifts are sometimes best.

"Gift certificates are great because people can buy what they want with them," she said. "Also, something people can use, such as Victoria's Secret bath beads, can be made to look cute."

Slind also said practical gifts can prove to be good gifts.

"Calendars for the next year are good because they will be used," she said. "Also, I once bought an appetizer cookbook with all the supplies needed to make them for a wedding shower. Things like that make good gifts."

Other traditional gifts can either hit or miss.

"One year my aunt gave me perfume, and I used it all," Jaynes said. "It was one of the best gifts because usually things like that turn out bad."

Some students said they believed the worst gifts they have received were not necessarily the least expensive ones, but the ones that were hard to use.

"I make a lot of my presents because I can and because of cost."

JANE SLIND
SENIOR IN HUMAN ECOLOGY

"Last year my dad went Christmas shopping by himself and bought me this glass head," Levell said.

"It just sits there, and I either put candy in it or my hats on it. I thought he'd given me a shrunken head when I opened it."

However, as bad as presents may be, some students are reluctant to part with them.

"One time in a gift exchange I got a hideous pair of socks that I never wore, but I still have them," Slind said.

"I'm one of those people that hangs on to everything, I guess. I've always felt bad because I hated them."

Jesse Jackson takes time after his speech to shake the hands of his supporters before departing backstage for a press conference. # Jackson urges victims take action

KEN DIEBEL
Collegian

Victims have to be the leaders in the fight against crime and violence.

That was the Rev. Jesse Jackson's message in his Landon Lecture Monday before a crowd of more than 6,000 people in Bramlage Coliseum.

"The victims must lead the social values redemptive revolution," Jackson said.

Violence, crime and drug use are threatening the stability and well-being of America, Jackson said, and too often people do nothing.

As an example Jackson asked the audience, many of whom were high-school and grade-school students, to stand up if they knew someone who was dead from drug use, who was in jail, if they had tried drugs themselves, if they knew someone who sold drugs, or someone who brought a gun to school.

The majority of the audience stood up.

However, when Jackson asked how many had told someone about the drug selling, the drug use or the gun toting very few stood up.

"Your silence allows your school environment to be a sanctuary, an incubator for the development of the No. 1 and the No. 2 threats to your lives — drugs and guns," Jackson said.

People are reluctant to take action themselves, he said. They look to the government for answers, and it is not supplying the right answers.

"Congress must offer more than prisons, and the president must offer more than platitudes," Jackson said.

The solution must come from the people, not from the government, he said.

"Without changing another law we have the power right now to stop killing each other," he said.

Jackson also noted the economic-stimulus package failed to pass through Congress, but the more expensive crime bill is likely to pass.

"The solution to the crisis that is projected here is more police, not more teachers; more jails, not more schools," Jackson said.

Violence is prevalent in American society, Jackson said. It is in our language and in our popular music, particularly in rap music.

However, there are rap artists whose songs are not violent, sexist or racist, but they are not offered recording contracts, Jackson said. It is the artists who do write such songs who are offered large contracts.

The victims of the racial slurs and the sexism in these songs need to picket and demonstrate against them, Jackson said.

"You've got to stand up and fight back with dignity," he said. "Your lives are at stake."

The youth of America in particular have great power to stand and fight for what is right, Jackson said.

"Your silence allows your school environment to be a sanctuary."

REV. JESSE JACKSON

"When young America comes alive, America gets better," he said.

But he compared the youth of today with the youth in the '50s and '60s who fought the civil-rights struggle and found today's young people wanting.

Today's youth is enthralled by drugs, greed and materialism, he said. He called it spiritual surrender.

"Contrast mindless materialism with the willingness to die for the message of integration," Jackson said.

He called on the youth of America to change their attitudes and to break the cycle of morally degenerate behavior. Young people, and victims in general, need to develop a new attitude about crime and violence. They have to say they are tired and will not take it any more, Jackson said.

"The slave master never retired; the slaves had to change their minds," he said. "We've got to change our minds about this situation."

Change begins with the individual, Jackson said. If crime and violence are to be defeated everyone must do their part.

"There can be no draft dodgers in this war as we fight crime and violence," Jackson said.

Students encouraged to break the silence

The Rev. Jesse Jackson's Landon Lecture yesterday brought a strong response from the audience in Bramlage Coliseum.

The United States is a violent society in which citizens must speak out against those people who are causing this violence, Jackson said. Those who don't speak out join the conspiracy of silence, he said.

for further coverage of Jackson's speech and press conference.

"I feel strongly that we are the ones who have to address this issue. One shouldn't be silent," Jackson said. "And, it isn't just the laws or the jails that are going to change this. It's our willingness to stand up and say 'It can't continue.'"

The issue of violence is one all citizens must deal with, Sen. Nancy Landon Kassebaum, R-Kan., said.

"Everybody who is silent is just as much a part of it as the conspirator," Kassebaum said.

She said she appreciated Jackson bringing to light the fact that there are consequences to the violence.

The young people especially needed to hear Jackson, Kassebaum said.

"It's a unique gift he has, I think, to speak in such a way that commands your attention," she said.

Kassebaum often assists the lecture series in connecting with and confirming speakers.

High-school students from the surrounding communities attended the lecture. Their enthusiasm could be heard when Jackson directed comments toward them.

"I thought a lot of issues were addressed, especially towards our young people," said Valerie Patterson, assistant Black Student Union sponsor at Highland Park High School. "It's about peer pressure."

Patterson said a lot of students are aware of the violence and the drugs but are afraid to do anything. She said she hopes Jackson's lecture will encourage students to stand up for what is right.

"I think his coming to Kansas was a real good idea," she said.

Crime prompts death-penalty bill

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — The 1994 Legislature is likely to give serious consideration to a death-penalty bill because of public anger over violent crime, House Speaker Bob Miller said Monday.

Miller, R-Wellington, predicted a bill that would reinstate capital punishment will pass the House. He also said combatting violent crime will be one of the biggest issues facing lawmakers after they convene in January.

"The public is so upset, and they're looking for government to provide leadership," said Miller, who supports the death penalty.

DEATH PENALTY

- Kansas has not had a valid death-penalty law since 1972.
- The last executions in Kansas were in 1965.

The state has not had a valid death-penalty law on the books since 1972, when the U.S. Supreme Court struck down all states' laws as unconstitutional. The last executions in Kansas were in 1965.

The Legislature approved capital-punishment bills in 1979, 1980, 1981 and 1985, but then-Gov. John Carlin vetoed them. His successor, Gov. Mike Hayden, strongly supported capital punishment, but the Senate rejected death-penalty bills in 1987 and 1989.

In 1992, supporters tried to amend a death-penalty proposal into a criminal-sentencing bill in the House and failed on a 58-65 vote. However, 25 members who voted against the proposals are no longer serving in the House.

Also, many legislators had assumed Gov. Joan Finney would veto a death-penalty bill because of her personal opposition to capital punishment. However, Finney has said she will let a bill become law without her signature.

"There's no doubt that a death-penalty bill will be debated and voted on," Miller said. "The chances are pretty good it will be passed by the House."

Miller said the death penalty will be part of a larger discussion about crime, which will include debate over how to handle young offenders and whether to make it illegal for young people to possess guns.

Miller said the proposal could have significant support, but he said many will be worried that passage of such a law could require spending on prison construction.

Kidnapped U.S. diplomat released Monday

Tribesmen demand money, economic plan

ASSOCIATED PRESS

SAN'A, Yemen — Kidnapped U.S. diplomat Haynes Mahoney III was released late Monday by Yemeni tribesmen who had held him hostage at their desert stronghold, Interior Minister Yehya al-Mutawakil said.

The minister said Mahoney was released at 10:30 p.m. He was kidnapped Thursday on his way to a Thanksgiving dinner.

"We have met all the demands of the kidnappers. We pledge to carry them out," the minister said in a telephone interview.

He said Mahoney already had been returned to the capital, San'a.

The demands included payment to the tribe for an oil-pumping station used by the U.S. Yemen Hunt Oil Co., back salaries for 150 tribesmen who were discharged from the presidential guard, back salaries for a number of similarly discharged officers and an economic development plan for the tribe's region, said Saleh al-Tam, a provincial official of the Yemen Socialist Party, one of the country's main political groups.

Five gunners abducted Mahoney, the head of the U.S. Information Service office, Thursday in San'a after he left a reception at the Taj Sheba hotel and headed to a friend's house for Thanksgiving dinner.

Al-Mutawakil and some influential tribal chiefs had negotiated with the tribe holding Mahoney in the desert stronghold at Gahm, 45 miles northeast of San'a.

The Saudi Arabian daily Asharq Al-Awsat, which closely watches Yemen, reported Monday that authorities had seized a number of relatives of the tribal leader, Sheik Mubarak Saleh al-Sa'idi, in an effort to speed the American's release.

Tribal sources, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the detained relatives included the sheik's son. Government officials would not confirm or deny the reports.

Yemen is in the throes of a severe political crisis because of differences between President Ali Abdullah Saleh and Vice President Ali Salem al-Beidh over the pace of reforms, including the failure to rein in an unruly security situation in a nation of armed tribesmen.

Mahoney, a widely traveled diplomat in his 40s whose father, retired diplomat Haynes Mahoney II, lives in Boston, had sent his wife and Ambassador Arthur Hughes a stream of handwritten notes saying his kidnappers are treating him well.

The elder Mahoney was driving on Cape Cod when he heard the news of the release on the car radio. His reaction was complete elation, he said.

"I blew the horn."

Mahoney is the first foreign diplomat among 200 other foreigners who local press reports said had been kidnapped over the past 18 months. The news said most of the kidnapped foreigners were released after a few days.

FINNEY PROCLAIMS DEC. 1 WORLD AIDS DAY

KANSAS UNEMPLOYMENT RISES

TOPEKA — A surge in the number of people looking for jobs sent the state's unemployment rate inching upward during October, the Department of Human Resources reported Monday.

The state's labor force increased by 6,200 people, and only about 4,600 of them could find jobs.

That sent the jobless rate to 4.7 percent, compared with 4.6 percent in September and 4.0 percent in October of 1992.

In the Wichita and Kansas City metropolitan areas, unemployment followed the state trend.

In the state's portion of the Kansas City metropolitan area, defined as Johnson, Leavenworth, Miami and Wyandotte counties, unemployment increased from 4.4 percent in September to 4.5 percent in October.

Cawker residents vow to fight for twine title

CAWKER CITY (AP) — A ball of twine in Texas has stolen an honor held for more than 30 years by this small north-central Kansas town, and residents here are vowing to fight for their title.

"The question is, is there any point in having the world's second-largest ball of twine?" asked Cawker City resident Merle Schreuber. "I think we've been resting on our laurels for too long. Maybe it's time to get back in gear."

The new world's largest ball of twine is the work of J.C. Payne of Valley View, Texas. His ball of twine, measured at 10 feet high, 41-1/2 feet around and 13,000 pounds, was named largest by Ripley's Believe It Or Not!, which is opening a Branson, Mo., museum around the ball next year.

Ripley's bought the ball of twine for between $20,000 and $30,000.

Cawker City's ball measures 40 feet around and weighs 16,292 pounds. Its unofficial caretaker says the Texas twine ball might be judged bigger, but it's not pure twine.

"... I heard it had plastic twine and all kinds of twine," Harold Reling said. "But our ball is all sisal. We're all sisal."

Sisal is a strong fiber related to henequen, which comes from the agave plant grown in Mexico.

Mob attacks South African police station

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Fifty assailants armed with automatic rifles and pistols attacked a police station in a black township, sparking fierce gunbattles that killed two people, police said Monday.

Ten men were arrested after Sunday night's clashes in a township and squatter camp east of Johannesburg.

In eastern Natal province, seven people died in an overnight attack on a rural settlement that is an African National Congress stronghold, police and the independent Human Rights Commission reported.

The dead were among 40 blacks killed in weekend political violence nationwide. More than 11,000 blacks have died in politically motivated clashes the past three years. Police blame most violence on a power-struggle between the nation's two main black groups, the Inkatha Freedom Party and the ANC.

In the Eden Park township outside Johannesburg, the police station came under fire from about 50 assailants Sunday evening. Police inside returned fire, killing two attackers, and pursued the others into the nearby Ivory Park squatter camp, police Lt. Deon Deens said.

Gunfights continued into the night in Ivory Park, and two police officers were wounded, Deens said. Arrests were made after police followed one of the gunners.

Race a litmus test for Mexican presidency

MERIDA, Mexico — Mexico's longtime governing party declared victory Monday in a bitterly contested governor's race tainted by opposition allegations of voter fraud.

Opposition candidates had said the race for Yucatan state governor would be an early test of President Carlos Salinas de Gortari's promise to hold a clean and fair presidential election in August. Salinas' Institutional Revolutionary Party, known by the initials PRI, has not lost the presidency in its 64-year history.

The independent pollster Opinion Professional gave Federico Granja Ricalde 58 percent to opposition candidate Ana Rosa Payan's 41 percent, based on exit surveys from Sunday's voting. Official results were not expected before late Wednesday.

Granja Ricalde, a 53-year-old civil engineer, is promising to create 15,000 jobs, mostly through public works, to combat rising unemployment.

But Payan, the 42-year-old mayor of the state capital Merida, refused to concede defeat.

Glue, typing paper tower supports 500-pound force

LISA STAAB
Collegian

It stands 27 inches high in a three-column structure supported by a triangular base. It can withstand the force of 500 pounds. It is constructed with 50 sheets of typing paper and Elmer's Glue-All™.

This describes the tower built by three students in this fall's engineering concepts class for students in general engineering.

Paul Gros, Wade Jueneman and Tony Luedders, freshmen in general engineering, surprised their instructor this year when their group project withstood a force of 500 pounds.

Luedders said the team spent about 20 hours building the project.

"All three of us thought about how the pressure would crush it and what we needed to do to stop it from twisting it that way, so we put some diagonal strips on it," Luedders said.

Ken Gowdy, professor and associate dean of the College of Engineering, said the class had three weeks to complete the mini-design project.

The assignment included the construction of a truss structure, and simple columns like a cylinder were excluded.

To complete the project, students were limited to 50 sheets of typing paper and Elmer's Glue-All™.

"It was graded upon load-to-mass ratio of the structure," Gowdy said. "Some students don't use as much paper, but this one had the maximum mass.

"The past course record was 375 pounds, but we could've put two football players on top of this one. Generally, most students' projects will withstand 50 pounds, some over 100, and only three or four can hold 200 pounds."

Luedders said their initial goal was 40 pounds, but once the project was completed, they set a goal for it to withstand 200 pounds.

Minimum dimensions of the structure were a height of 70 centimeters, a base of 17 centimeters and a top diameter of 12 centimeters, Gowdy said.

The towers were first weighed to verify amount of materials, he said.

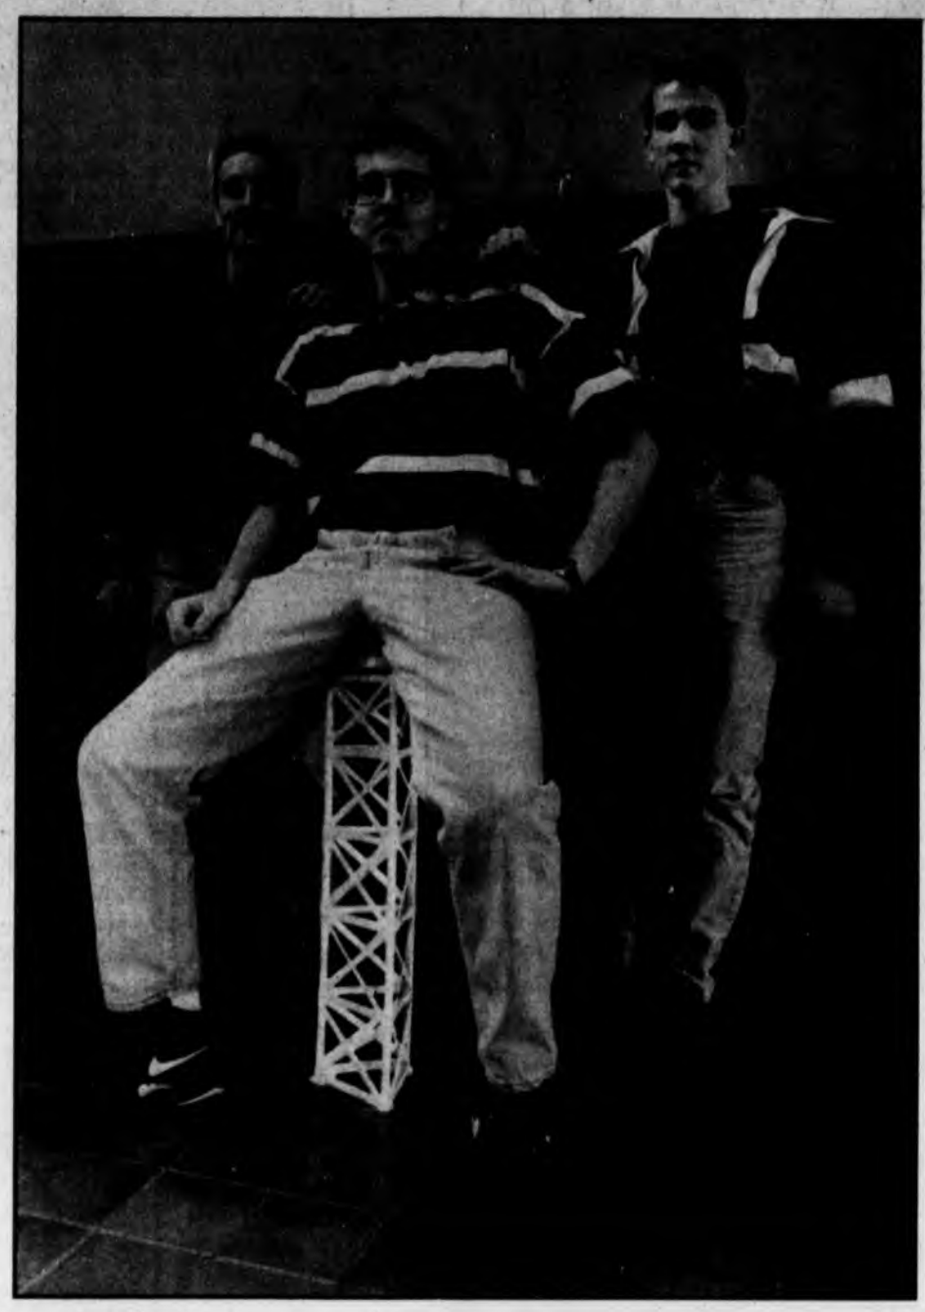
Then towers were placed in a testing machine with a compressive force applied down upon a wood plate resting on top of the tower.

Gowdy said the class project is important for freshman engineers to learn team work and engineering design concepts.

"Most freshmen don't want to do it at first, because they've had no experience with team design," Gowdy said.

"Engineers deal more with open-ended problems rather than closed-end problems which have only one solution.

In engineering, when dealing with design, there will be a large number of designs that can work," he said.



In addition, Gowdy said the students gain confidence during the project.

"Most of the students enjoy it once they get started and get better acquainted with their team members," he said. "The project is challenging, but they do excellent work and usually surprise themselves.

"We try to give them an experience in design before they learn the basic engineering sciences," he said. "They gain an appreciation for the additional knowledge they would need to draw on to build a good tower as well as experience in group design."

Jueneman said he agreed with Gowdy.

"I've learned I couldn't have built it by myself," Jueneman said. "We all threw out ideas, and working together as a team was the best way to complete the project."

Paul Gros sits atop the paper tower constructed for an Engineering Concepts class with Wade Jueneman (left) and Tony Luedders, all three are freshmen in general engineering. The tower, which was made with glue and 50 sheets of paper, sustained over 500 pounds of weight before beginning to buckle. The new record weight smashed the previous best by over 100 pounds.

Students gain experience in L.I.F.E.

BRENT DUNGAN
Collegian

K-State is offering a program that enhances the health of faculty, staff and the community, and at the same time gives students an opportunity to gain practical work experience.

The Lifestyle Improvement through Fitness Enhancement, allows students to work with L.I.F.E. members to design appropriate fitness programs.

The L.I.F.E. program, which is located in Ahearn Field House, offers members the use of cardiovascular equipment, basketball courts, an indoor track and weight rooms.

Classes in step aerobics, aqua aerobics and arthritis aquatics also are included in the $30 per semester membership cost.

Edmund Acevedo, associate professor of kinesiology and director of the Center for Exercise Research, said a fee is charged to members because the program receives no funding from student admissions.

Acevedo said the program is open to anyone interested, but the majority of the members are faculty, staff and community members.

Most students find it easier to use the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex, Acevedo said.

James Griffing, coordinator of L.I.F.E., said practicum students conduct exercise tests, prescribe a certain program of exercise, and help with fitness promotions and planning special events.

Acevedo said students with dual degrees in nutrition may offer nutritional counseling and analysis.

"We like to give the member a better idea of how he or she is eating, and what improvements can be made," Griffing said.

As part of a community outreach program, students are sometimes sent out to middle and high schools, and small businesses and corporations to offer the testing and prescription services, Acevedo said.

Interested parties just need to sign up in room 3 of the Natatorium.

▶Aidid demands U.N. troop removal

MOGADISHU, Somalia (AP) — Mohamed Farrah Aidid denounced the United Nations anew today and demanded it leave peacemaking in Somalia to a neutral body of African countries, international donors and Somalis.

The faction leader also proposed that all political factions meet for talks in the Somali capital the first week of January. Aidid boycotted the latest U.N effort at peace, an international donors conference that started today in Ethiopia's capital, Addis Ababa. Somali faction leaders were expected to meet Tuesday and Wednesday on the sidelines.

Ethiopian President Meles Zenawi opened the conference with a blunt warning to Somali factions that the international community is fed up with their inability to work together.

Hacking away hair as sentence reveals lack of judgement

"Give me 30 days or 10 inches of your hair."

This is a justice of the peace's philosophy toward teen-age offenders.

Tony Polumbo, justice of the peace in Harris County, Texas, is taking a new cut out of crime by offering to lighten sentences if the offenders will cut their hair.

"The purpose is to give these kids a different mind-set or image, try to get them away from the subculture and into the mainstream again," Polumbo said.

Mainstream? What mainstream is he in? Does the term 'individuality' mean anything to you, sir?

And what message does it send to criminals if you pay for your crimes with inches of your own fair locks?

Granted, Polumbo probably isn't dealing with rapists or murderers. However, he does have some good ideas, such as sentencing teens caught speeding to attend five funerals or putting them on teen courts to see the other side of the justice system.

But still, trying to convert someone to conform to the norm is what causes most people to "rebel" in the first place, especially the younger crowds.

"When you deal with youngsters, you can't deal with normal. ... Most kids are used to being beat on and using their unfortunate situations to act ugly," Polumbo said.

Ugly? Long hair is ugly? How long will it be before teen-agers are treated as young adults and not another species entirely?

What is he doing for any female defendants who appear before him — offering them lighter sentences if they grow their hair out and start wearing mini-skirts so they can fit his pre-conceived norm?

Polumbo said he prides himself on being unconventional. Well, that only seems a little two-sided if he's unconventional and is trying to convert people back to the norm.

Dear Justice Polumbo, some of us might want long hair and some short hair, but when elders like yourself start telling us what we can and can't have, it will probably lead to us tuning you out.

Didn't people grow their hair out in the '60s? Wonder if Polumbo favored long locks then?

TOLES

Despite prejudices, there's nothing wrong with cold, hard cash

Bow down before the one you serve
You're going to get what you deserve.
—Nine Inch Nails

If I were ever going to build the perfect world, I'd sit back with a case of Mountain Dew, put my feet up and work myself into a caffeine frenzy before making any big decisions. I'd have to ponder everything carefully, and I'd make a lot of changes, but one element in this ideal universe would be shamelessly dominant.

Money.

Happiness is a full wallet, money in my hand and the fruits of my bounty spread out before me. Money is not bad. Money is not the root of all evil. Money is paper and sandwiched circles of compressed metal alloys. It's inanimate. It just sits there. It refuses to defend itself or support the common misconception that it can make anybody do anything.

Money takes the blame for all societal and social ails of the moment. It's greed, they say. That's what money does to people. What would people blame for everything if we didn't have a monetary economy? The greatest irony of America is that we are ashamed to be capitalists, which is the essence of what made our country different in the beginning. Money equals freedom, not because you can buy freedom, but because freedom allows you to make money.

For a moment, consider who these people are who claim to hate money. They are usually those who have money and feel guilty about how they obtained it, or they do not have money and begrudge anyone else who does.

A general destruction of the business world and the bad PR that big business has given itself has hurt the way society perceives making money. If a wealthy person has earned his money dishonestly, it's not his money that's evil and corrupt. That person is evil and corrupt. The money is the tainted product, not the cause. The corrupt businessman hasn't made money. He has manipulated it or stolen it, but there is no relation between him and the man who gets an honest day's work for an honest day's pay.

The person who dedicates his life to what he loves and has money as a concrete result of his lifestyle is noble. The person who robs banks is not.

SARA SMITH

But I digress. There's nothing I love as much as a crisp, clean bill with numbers in the corners. The higher those numbers go, the better. I love these things, or more specifically, what they represent. When I get money, I don't go and spend it immediately. My mooching friends (they know who they are) might tell you differently, but I don't believe that money represents just a new pair of shoes or a payment on the car.

That's only one end of the process. The other end, the important end, is how you get the money in the first place. Accumulated wealth shouldn't give you pride because you can buy a Ferrari. It should give you pride because you were competent enough to earn the money, which later bought the Ferrari.

What makes money noble is the concept behind it. Productive work, ability and effort are what put money in the pockets of honest people. Nothing evil about that, right?

Remember those people who say the love of money is the root of all evil the next time you pick up a paycheck. Should you feel guilty, or apologetic to those who did not earn it? Are you participating in corruption or becoming evil? No. Be honest with yourself. Are you growing horns? If not, be proud of what you have earned.

The amount on that check (minus tax, social security and everything else) is the only sum of your work you may ever see on paper. Revel in it.

But money is not the end-all-be-all

Twentysomethings are called greedy, but this idea is quite a bit misleading

I was all set to write this week about the depressing state of public education and how a voucher system may — or may not — be the answer (didn't think I'd give next week's column away, did you?), when something changed my mind.

I saw the headline "Stop the whining, twentysomethings" in the Sunday Wichita Eagle.

Hmmm. That's me, I thought.

So I read about me. I learned a lot. I found out I was a money-hungry, belly-aching, knowin'-no-history waste of flesh.

In the writer's words: "The laments of twentysomethings, to a disturbing extent, focus on money rather than idealism." We complain we're "the only generation in recent memory to face financial difficulties."

Our "self-absorption and materialism" is "unsettling." "At least when the boomers rose up and complained in the 1960s there was far less moaning about the comforts they were missing and far more about the problems of the world," he said.

I have to admit, I was angry. Not because I think my generation is perfect, but because everything this guy attributed to the Xers, as we're called, had more to do with what other people say about us that what I've heard any of us say.

He said we love to wrap ourselves in "martyrdom." That we sit in the comfort of our poolside apartments worrying naught about the evils of our society, at the same age our grandparents were "fighting a protracted war against fascism to preserve the freedoms we all now enjoy."

He said we scoff at the foolish idealism of the '60s and instead "swan dive into the great financial bonanza that the 1980s represented."

Uhhh, yeah. Where does this guy get this stuff? Neil Jumonville (probably not his real name, if he's smart) is an associate professor of history in Florida. But he probably got his most of ideas from reading about his students in shiny magazine spreads, not talking to them.

Before the whole Generation X fad started not too long ago, I was apparently out of the loop. I went to college to learn and to get a degree. I don't think I had any illusions about finding a job. I always figured it would be tough.

LAJEAN RAU

But in a matter of a couple of months last year, I read about 10 articles on my Generation X. I found out I was part of the first generation to do worse than their parents. That jobs were scarce, and that people my age spent more money on fun and travel than groceries and furniture.

No surprise on the latter, but the first two were sort of a rude awakening. A whole generation, doomed.

Now I'm being told to stop whining about something I don't remember ever really whining about.

I guess I'm just confused. Are we in trouble, or are we not? If we are, shouldn't we complain? And if we're not, where did this whole phenomenon come from?

I showed the column to some friends to make sure it wasn't just me who was offended. Response was mixed. But those who thought the guy was right said his ideas didn't apply to them. It was those other people — the "they" we all talk about.

Generations don't name themselves. They get named. My friends and I haven't sat around for the past few years thinking up a cool name for ourselves. Nor have we spent a lot of time planning what we say to the media when they call to ask us what it's like to be Xers.

We've been going to school and working and having fun when we can find the time. We've been planning our futures just like every generation before us. We watch TV. We read. We vote, sometimes. We pay taxes and tuition.

I didn't go into journalism and teaching for the money and prestige. I've resigned myself to never driving a $40,000 car or having a cappuccino maker.

Like most of my friends, I just want to be happy. And things and money, for the most part, don't equal that for me.

At first, I thought maybe I was the exception. That most of the people I know were exceptions. But I don't think so.

Most Xers I know live meagerly but would like to have more money. They spend a long time looking for a job or go back to school and further into debt. Few are complacent. And most of them have ideas about making this world a better place.

Sure, there are some who couldn't care less. There are a lot of selfish, ignorant, closed-minded people in any generation.

I think Mr. Jumonville is suffering from a bit of ignorance himself if he thinks just because a few clever journalists and pop scientists gave our generation a name, we're all the same. I hate being told to eat words I never uttered.

Most people I know don't sit around in their poolside apartments complaining about how much worse we have it than previous generations.

We have better things to do.

The right to quaff a brew or two shouldn't be so highly restricted

Editor,

I feel its time to address an issue that most of us don't really think about until Friday or Saturday nights when we shell out five bucks or so to get into TW Longhorn's, Snookies, etc., only to get a colorful stamp or marking tattooed on our hand.

This marking simply means: Minor! This is the result of a July 1, 1985, law raising the legal drinking age to 21. It's my opinion that this age increase was made hastily and without much thought. Underage drinking since then has only increased, which, to 18- to 20-year-olds, was expected. The new law has not served as a significant deterrent in any of its eight years of existence.

I find it remarkably ironic that at 16 years of age, one can drive a car. A person is given the responsibility to control a potential deathtrap. At 18 years of age, a person can marry, incur debts, sign contracts, vote and buy tobacco but still cannot buy or consume alcohol for three more years. I'm not an avid drinker, but I do drink on occasion to relieve stress. I'm being denied this right by law, and so are many of you. I think it's about time we develop a "minor" solution to a major problem. Decrease the age.

AIDS traumas revealed in film

Candlelight service followed emotional stories

COLLEGIAN STAFF

An emotional film took the place of a panel discussion by people infected with the HIV virus Monday evening in the Union. The discussion was not possible because of the illness of the panel members.

Kelley Fink, health educator at Lafene Health Center, said the individuals who had planned to speak as a part of HIV/AIDS Awareness Week got sick, and instead she decided to present "Common Threads — Stories From The Quilt."

Rock Hudson, Bobbi Campbell, David Mandell Jr., Brad Sawtell and Gary Walsh are a few of the thousands of names of dead AIDS victims whose lives are remembered on the AIDS quilt.

Toward the end of the film, teary-eyed people shared the pain and emotion that families, friends and lovers have felt with their loved ones who have died from AIDS.

Greg Eiselein, assistant professor of English, said he cried while watching the film and could relate to the stories told.

"I had an uncle who died from AIDS, and I have some friends who are HIV-infected positive, but that's not the only reason I came," Eiselein said.

Scott McLean, senior in journalism, said AIDS is an awful disease that affects him personally and is something that needs to be stopped.

"Whenever I hear the word AIDS, I get so angry that people were so blind and prejudiced towards a group of people," McLean said. "Even if it was a gay disease — who gave them the right to let them die."

Erica Fredeen, junior in elementary education, said the film was powerful and made her both angry and sad.

Sara Blecke, junior in graphic design, said she felt the same way, and she wants to do as much as she can to make people understand AIDS.

"My mom takes care of AIDS patients, and I've known a few people that have been affected by it," Blecke said.

A candlelight memorial service followed the film, with the opening song, "Let There Be Peace On Earth," sung by Karen Martin, director of the Minority Engineering Program. The emotion the song evoked caused many people in the audience to cry.

The song was followed by the lighting of a candle representing memory, solidarity, love, repentance, hope, thankfulness and commitment of anyone affected by the AIDS virus.

The candlelight ceremony is meant to signify and remember all the people who have suffered from AIDS, Fink said.

Fink said AIDS doesn't stop with AIDS Awareness Week but continues daily, and problems can be eased through education, motivating each other to protest when the government isn't acting, and getting rid of stereotypes.

"It doesn't stop in just a week. We need to take action ourselves," Fink said.

Graves vows to reduce state spending

BOB FLEENER
Collegian

Bill Graves, Kansas secretary of state, spoke to members of K-State's College Republicans Monday evening on his abilities to be a fiscally responsible governor of Kansas if elected.

"It is possible for the state government to get its spending under control," Graves said. "And by doing that, I firmly believe we will find the very precious dollars we need to invest in the things which need it."

State government has increased its spending, he said, adding that the Kansas Legislature is to be held to blame for this unneeded growth.

"We must commit the state to match the spending growth of the average Kansas income. Currently, the state's budget has grown by 9 percent. This is more than the average household," Graves said.

Graves has had 13 years of experience in government. He said he has not had experience in the Legislature and considers this an advantage in that it will give him the ability to make changes based on principle rather than politics. For the past seven years, Graves has been the state treasurer.

"I think what we have been missing is someone who wants to roll their sleeves up on a day-to-day basis and run what amounts to a six-and-half-billion-dollar and 42-thousand-employee business. That is what the state of Kansas, what state government is," Graves said.

Although the state treasurer's office is not the same as the governor's position, Graves said his success in office gives him confidence. He said he can transfer the success of the old office to the office of governor.

The highway program, which former Gov. Mike Hayden established, has given a solid fiscal base to the state of Kansas, he said. The program would continue and possibly expand if he won, Graves said.

"You look at the numbers in terms of economic growth in the state of Kansas — what we can look to is the result of the highway construction program," Graves said.

The federal government will have to keep their end of the bargain on any mandates, Graves said.

"Unfunded mandates have got to stop. When I'm governor, every chance I get, using the gubernatorial veto, we won't have these mandates," Graves said.

Israel accused of stalling troop withdrawal

Details, urgency disagreed on as deadline draws near

ASSOCIATED PRESS

CAIRO, Egypt — Israel is stalling at talks on implementing its peace accord with the PLO to put pressure on Palestinian negotiators, the chief Palestinian delegate charged Monday.

Nabil Shaath told reporters that Israeli negotiators did not seem committed to meeting a Dec. 13 deadline for Israeli troops to begin pulling out of the occupied Gaza Strip and the town of Jericho on the West Bank.

The date was set in the Sept. 13 peace accord, which would have Israel turn over the two areas to Palestinian control as a test for a full peace later between Palestinians and Israelis.

But Israel's concern over ensuring security — especially for Jewish settlers — has collided with the PLO's hope for a broad withdrawal to show Palestinians the talks have real meaning.

As the Dec. 13 deadline approaches, the negotiators seem to disagree both on details of the withdrawal and the urgency of beginning it on schedule.

"There are several Israeli attempts to ease off their commitment to implement the date ... as a way to put pressure on the Palestinians," Shaath said. He accused Israel of complicating the talks.

Shaath and other Palestinians say the deadline is important to prevent the negotiations from being overwhelmed by violence in the occupied lands and to avoid delays in Israel's separate peace talks with Syria, Jordan and Lebanon.

In Israel, Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin said his government was working toward the deadline, but added it was more important to come up with a good plan than be tied to a specific date.

"First of all from our point of view, security is important," Rabin told a parliamentary committee. "Therefore, it is preferable to reach a clear agreement so that during implementation we will have as little misunderstandings as possible."

Rabin has to move cautiously because escalating violence between Palestinians and Israelis has eroded public support in Israel for the pact.

In Copenhagen, Denmark, PLO chairman Yasser Arafat warned that the whole peace process will be affected if the Israelis do not beginning their pullout as scheduled.

The Palestine Liberation Organization leader spoke to reporters on the last day of a five-day tour of Scandinavia to raise funds for the Palestinian autohomous zone.

In a new threat to the peace accord, gunners loyal to Arafat opened fire on five Israeli police and army stations in Gaza today. No one was reported hurt in the attacks by the Fatah Hawks.

Officials to release bowl destinations today

DEREK SIMMONS
Collegian

K-State will know its bowl destination as early as today.

The athletic department has scheduled a press conference for today, most likely to announce the Wildcats' bowl game plans.

The Cats, 8-2-1 overall and third in the Big Eight Conference, will be making just their second bowl game appearance in school history. The only other appearance was in 1982, when the Cats lost 14-3 to Wisconsin in the Independence Bowl.

Bill Snyder, 1993 Big Eight Coach of the Year, plans to make the announcement following a team meeting Tuesday, although any official announcement still hinges on the final selections of the Bowl Coalition. Wildcat players are supposed to meet today to vote on which bowl game they would prefer to play in.

"The Bowl Coalition hasn't released any of the eligible teams yet and has scheduled another teleconference for Tuesday afternoon," K-State athletic director Max Urick said. "Obviously, we can't accept any official bowl invitations until the Bowl Coalition makes its selections, and we anticipate that to happen on Tuesday."

It has been speculated that the John Hancock Bowl will take Oklahoma, leaving the Aloha Bowl with Colorado and the Copper Bowl selecting K-State.

The Coalition teleconference is at noon today. Marcia Cherner, executive director of the Aloha Bowl, said she is 99-percent sure Colorado and K-State will be released from the Coalition, and if that is the case, they would absolutely select Colorado.

"I feel they had a tougher schedule," Cherner said Monday from Honolulu. "Colorado has such a large alumni base, and we have been interested in them since 1984. We have never had the opportunity to pick them up until now. The opportunity finally came, and we couldn't pass it up."

Cherner did say all three Big Eight teams eligible were solid picks, and the fact that all three were ranked in the top 20 made it a hard decision.

BIG EIGHT BOWL GAME INFORMATION
- John Hancock Bowl: El Paso, Texas / 1:30 p.m. Dec. 30 / CBS
- Jeep Eagle Aloha Bowl: Honolulu, Hawaii / 2:30 p.m. Dec. 25 / ABC
- Weiser Lock Copper Bowl: Tucson, Ariz. / 7 p.m. Dec. 29 / ESPN
- Federal Express Orange Bowl: Miami, Fla. / 7 p.m. Jan. 1 / NBC

"K-State fans should be much happier with the Copper Bowl because more of them can go to Tucson," she said.

Craig Helwig, executive director of the John Hancock Bowl, said they are strongly considering Oklahoma.

"We've said we were leaning toward Oklahoma, but between them and Colorado, it is a dead heat," Helwig said from El Paso, Texas. "Oklahoma beat Texas A&M, and that was Texas A&M's only loss. But Colorado played a solid non-conference schedule."

The John Hancock Bowl will pick its teams after the Gator Bowl in the Bowl Coalition draft. Helwig said their selection began with the Big Eight, went to the Pac-10 and is now back to the Big Eight.

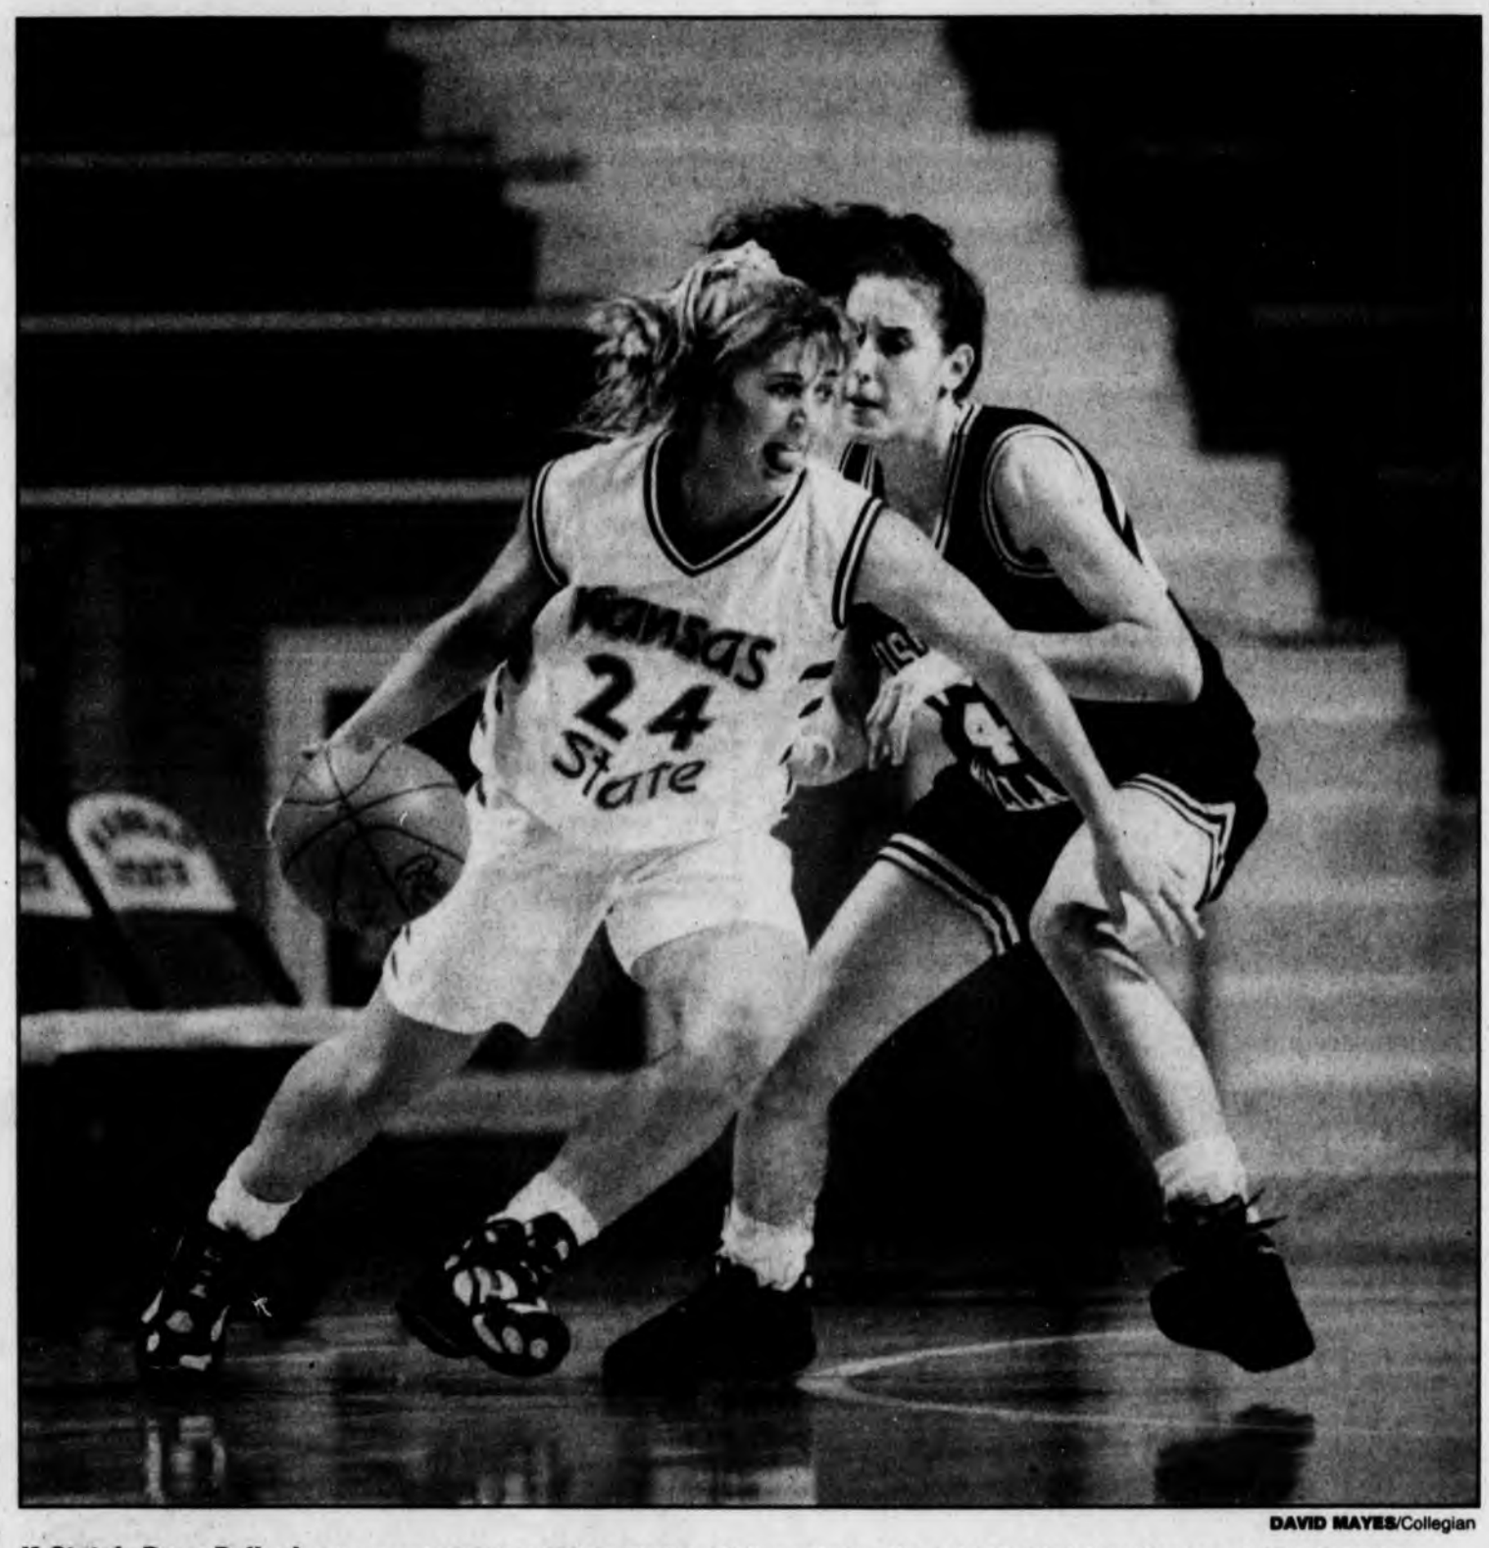
"It's not supposed to be released until Dec. 5, but it is probable to us that we will have a Big Eight selection, and that is a very good pool," Helwig said. "There are three very good teams to choose from in Oklahoma, Colorado and Kansas State."

So, is K-State a possible selection for the John Hancock Bowl, which is played on Dec. 30 in El Paso, Texas?

"I'd hate to say, because these things have changed daily," Helwig said. "Coach Snyder has done a good job done there. They've all done a great job."

But Helwig said the John Hancock will still have to wait their turn at a selection.

"The reality is how the other bowls pick that are ahead of us," he said. "We are directly impacted by the selections ahead of us. We are obviously dependent on other bowls."



Wyoming has already accepted a bid to the Copper Bowl, said Ed Linta, who is on the selection committee for the Copper and also a former player for the K-State football team. Linta said K-State still remains on top of the list for an opponent to Wyoming for the Copper Bowl, which is played on Dec. 29 in Tucson, Ariz.

"It should all come out tomorrow and be all settled," Linta said from Tucson. "We just have to wait until everything materializes."

Linta said he agreed with the scenario that the John Hancock would seek Oklahoma, the Aloha would take Colorado and the Copper would get its wish in K-State.

"I think the John Hancock might be looking at Oklahoma's football tradition and the history of Oklahoma football," he said. "You also have to look at the fact that Oklahoma recruits a lot of Texas boys. A lot of their families would be right there for the game."

Nebraska is the only other Big Eight team eligible for a post-season appearance. The Cornhuskers will be playing in the Orange Bowl.

Despite spotless record, Agler still not content

JEREMY CRABTREE
Collegian

Even though the K-State women's basketball team won 73-45 last night against Missouri-Rolla, improving its record to 2-0, coach Brian Agler said the team has a long way to go.

"We had stretches that we played well tonight," Agler said. "We need to improve in many areas, mainly on the offensive side of the ball."

The Cats lead 31-23 at halftime but had trouble adjusting to the Miners' 1-3-1 zone, which resulted in 21 turnovers.

"They made the switch to the zone, and we didn't start attacking it," Agler said. "To be successful against the zone, we have to attack it inside-out. Missouri-Rolla did a good job with it.

"Our offense relies on what defense they play. A lot of the time our offense looked cluttered because we were having a hard time adjusting to it. We did do some good things, though."

Lynn Holzman said the Miners' zone caused the Cats some problems.

"They had us all spread out," Holzman said. "We need to attack it more and penetrate. We had too many turnovers against the zone."

While the Miners' zone was causing the Cats problems on offense, the K-State man-to-man defense held Missouri-Rolla to only 20-percent shooting in the first half.

"Our defense had stretches that they played really well," Agler said. "For a while in the first half, we couldn't stop them. They were just exchanging baskets with us."

With the Cats leading by eight points at the start of the second half, the Miners opened with a basket by point guard Christie Williams.

After that bucket by the Miners, the Cats owned the next four minutes, going on a 13-4 run to stretch their lead to 15 points.

The run was highlighted by a three-pointer from Shawnda DeCamp and two baskets by Holzman.

Shanele Stires, who had 22 points to lead the Cats, said the run early in the second half was important.

"Instead of coming out nonchalant like we did in the last game, we came out and took it to them," Stires said. "After that they had to play catch-up."

DeCamp, who finished with 21 points, including five three-pointers, said she was happy with her performance.

"We're still learning the offense, and we need to get more game experience," DeCamp said. "Other than that, I'm satisfied with the performance tonight."

Holzman finished with 13 points for the Cats, and Stires had 11 rebounds.

▶STAATS PACES K-STATE AT NCAA CHAMPIONSHIPS

Four athletes represented K-State at the NCAA Cross Country Championships, hosted by Lehigh University at Bethlehem, Pa.

Senior Paulette Staats was the Wildcats' top runner, finishing 40th in a field of 183. The race marked her fourth consecutive trip to nationals and her last as a Wildcat.

"I thought Paulette ran real well," Coach Terry Drake said. "She had a good season."

Staats was clocked at 17:27.8, her best time of the season by four seconds. Her 40th-place finish was the highest of her career at the national meet.

Teammate Jeanene Rugan placed 118th, the best finish in her three trips to the meet. Rugan covered the 5,000-meter course in 18:13.3.

Francis O'Neill placed 65th in a 180-man field for the K-State men. His 10,000-meter time of 31:10.5 was a personal record.

"Francis never really got over being sick earlier in the season," Drake said. "He ran well in the early part of the race, but he was exhausted over the last couple of miles."

Sophomore Ryan Clive-Smith, who Drake said made tremendous improvements at the Big Eight and District V Championships, placed 127th with a time of 32:02.1.

"We'll continue for the next six to eight weeks with same type of conditioning we have been doing and try to get the team ready for indoor competition," Drake said.

The track team opens the indoor season Dec. 10 at the KSU Allcomers at Ahearn Field House.

▶ELLIOTT ANOUNCES FIVE SIGNEES FOR GOLF TEAM

Four Kansas high-school golfers and one Oklahoman have signed national letters of intent to play golf at K-State, Coach Mark Elliott announced Monday.

The only early signee for the women's team is Mitzi Taylor from Edmond, Okla. Last summer, she was the South Central PGA Player of the Year.

"We're excited to have a player of Mitzi's caliber on our team," Elliott said. "She is coming from a great high-school team, and we hope she will bring some of that winning attitude to K-State."

Signing on with the men's team is Brian Walter, a two-year captain of the Manhattan High School golf team, who recorded three wins and two second-place finishes during his junior season. Brant Benninga, a three-year letter winner in golf and swimming at Newton High School, will also join the Wildcat squad.

The third signee is Zachary Clark. A four-year captain of the Olathe South High golf team, Clark earned Kansas City Star all-Metro Honorable Mention honors.

The final golfer to sign with the men's squad is Jeremy Higgins from Dodge City. In 1993, Higgins won the Class 6A state championship as a junior.

Stull steps down as Missouri's coach

ASSOCIATED PRESS

COLUMBIA, Mo. — A solemn Bob Stull was relieved of his football coaching duties at Missouri on Monday and was named an assistant athletic director.

Athletic director Dan Devine said the decision was reached mutually between himself, Stull and Missouri Chancellor Charles Kiesler.

Both Devine and Kiesler took pains to praise Stull's integrity, but it was clear the bottom line was winning at once-proud Missouri. The Tigers completed their 10th consecutive losing season Nov. 20 by getting shut out by traditional rival Kansas 28-0.

"While it was a very difficult decision to make the coaching change, the chancellor, Coach Stull and I felt it was necessary in response to the negativity that surrounded the program for the last half of the season and the serious limitations such an atmosphere placed on us for next year," said Devine, a Missouri legend who coached the football team in its glory days of the '60s.

Kiesler praised Stull's commitment to academics.

"On the other hand this is Big Eight athletics, and you have to win," he said. "I do expect us to be competitive and win our share or some share of the conference championship."

Stull, who had gone on the defensive as criticism of his program mounted, said he believed he had built a solid foundation at Missouri.

"We really believe we did what we thought was best under the circumstances," he said.

"We've done the best we could."

Stull said he had been thinking about going into the administrative side of college athletics and this was a good opportunity to do that.

Stull was 15-38-2 in his five seasons at Missouri. He was considered a wunderkind among coaches after performing miracles at Massachusetts and Texas-El Paso.

He went to El Paso after a 7-4 season in his second year at Massachusetts.

After a 4-8 year in his first season at El Paso, he had seasons of 7-4 and 10-3 before making the jump to Missouri.

Stull started 2-9, had his best season of 4-7 in 1990, but his last three years were 3-7-1, 3-8, and 3-7-1.

The 4-7 season included three losses in the final minute, including the infamous Fifth Down game with the Colorado team that went on to win the national championship.

The losses this year included a 73-0 embarrassment at the hands of Texas A&M in the second game.

Stull's defense of the program included the traditionally tough schedule that Missouri plays, inadequate facilities and high academic standards.

Stull replaced Woody Widenhofer, who resigned after a 12-31-1 record in four seasons. The last winning year at Missouri was 7-5 in 1983 under Warren Powers.

In a 10-year coaching career, Stull was 46-65-2.

Dear Cassandra,

We think Batman is living is our hall. Really.

It all started when some of us walked in on him while he was sitting alone in his room, with his lights out, listening to the "Batman" soundtrack.

He wasn't doing anything ... just brooding. But there's more. He goes out late at night, and we never can tell where he's going.

He leaves wearing an overcoat, and we believe he is wearing a costume underneath it. Also, sometimes in the middle of a sentence, he will suddenly blurt out, "I'm Batman."

There is also a dark side to him. He beat up his roommate, the Boy Wonder, and now he lives alone as the Dark Knight. We believe he was beaten up because Robin has been seen with the person who we believe to be Catwoman. We can understand Batman's jealousy but are fearful of his wrath.

The question is this, Cassandra: How can we tell if the entity living on our floor is really Batman? And how do we treat him?

We are concerned, because if the Caped Crusader really is living on our floor, we must take measures to keep his secret identity a secret.

Sincerely,
Concerned Citizens of Gotham

Dear Concerned Citizens,

I'm not sure how one could determine with any amount of certainty if this guy is indeed Batman. I suppose you could just assume, as it seems you already have, that he is the Dark Knight.

But it sounds like you NEED to believe it is Batman, much like my 5-year-old sister NEEDS to believe in the Tooth Fairy and Santa Claus.

And that's OK. It's not a crime to be hanging out on the fringes of reality — even if you are on the verge of adulthood.

But back to your questions ...

Treat him like you would any other superhero. With a pittering, sickly, humble sort of nauseating adoration.

And sure, go ahead and keep it a secret. If this guy's hanging out in a K-State residence hall and beating up on his only friend, he surely needs a break from society's prying eyes.

P.S. Cassandra needs YOU. Your letters, that is.

'Common Thread' celebrates legacy

Nashville stars recreate original Eagles songs

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NASHVILLE — If the Eagles started putting out records today, would they be played on country radio instead of pop stations?

Don Henley, who co-wrote or sang lead on most of the band's hits, thinks they would.

"Maybe we would have in the first half of our careers," Henley said.

"We started off as sort of a country-bluegrass band with a banjo player."

It is the Eagles' legacy to country music that is celebrated, and used, on "Common Thread: The Songs of the Eagles." The project is raising money for one of Henley's pet causes, the preservation of Walden Woods, inspiration for Henry David Thoreau's "Walden."

"Common Thread" includes performances of Eagles standards by such country stars as Travis Tritt, Vince Gill and Lorrie Morgan.

It reached the top of Billboard's country music charts and is expected to sell 2 million by January.

But many reviews have been negative, with some complaining the new recordings are carbon copies.

Others have repeated old charges that the Eagles' songs were misogynous or the band had an elitist, jet-set attitude.

And there has been controversy. An Associated Press article in September reported that $46,000 donated for Walden Woods was instead given to other charitable causes Henley supports.

Nashville record industry executives since have complained they were led to believe all royalties from "Common Thread" were going to Walden Woods. However, Tennessee's Charitable Solicitations Division concluded on Nov. 17 there was no criminal wrongdoing.

Henley was happy to address such criticism during an interview, becoming unruffled only at the news reports questioning his intentions with "Common Thread" proceeds.

Technically, Henley said, the fund did contribute $46,000 to other causes. The money went to communities in Texas and California where benefit concerts for Walden Woods were staged.

"The money that's gone to other causes amounts to less than 1 percent of the total figures raised for Walden Woods," he said.

"Oh yeah, I gave $1,000 to Arlo Guthrie to use for his center for abused children. Shoot me!"

Although Henley doesn't perform on "Common Thread," he said he was involved and is happy with the results.

"I wrote the liner notes for starters," Henley noted. "I had a little to do with the cover design."

He said he also pitched a song from the band's catalog.

"I thought the song 'Saturday Night' was kind of a country song that had been overlooked. It was on the 'Desperado' album and didn't get a lot of attention, and I thought it was a beautiful song, sort of an elegant waltz.

"So I suggested that Billy Dean do it, which he did. I don't know if he wanted to or not, but he did."

Other song-artist match-ups on "Common Thread" include Tanya Tucker on "Already Gone," Tritt on "Take It Easy," Gill on "I Can't Tell You Why," Clint Black on "Desperado" and (former Henley duet partner) Trisha Yearwood on "New Kid in Town."

"I think Trisha's version of "New Kid in Town" is definitely better than our version," Henley said.

"I commend them (the artists on 'Common Thread') for their bravery, 'cause I wouldn't want to tackle something like this.

"Some critics are going to say you've done it too close to the original, and some are going to say you did it too different. It's really kind of a no-win situation."

Making a point

The Rev. Jesse Jackson emphasizes a point during his speech as the 97th Landon Lecturer Monday morning in Bramlage Coliseum. About 6,000 people from across Kansas attended the lecture.

LECTURE

Jackson offers solutions to drug, poverty problems

TED KADAU JR.
Collegian

After speaking to an audience of 6,044 in Bramlage Coliseum Monday, the Rev. Jesse Jackson had a press conference in which he answered questions from the media.

These questions included such social and political queries as to how communities across the nation could solve problems with drugs, gang violence and poverty — all of which were issues Jackson addressed in his speech.

Jackson said there is a significant portion of our nation's population living in poverty.

There are mothers without husbands; a large percentage of youth have been robbed of their innocence, and violence has been commercialized by the media.

He said for many, going to jail is actually a step up.

"They are no longer homeless. They have organized recreation. They won't be hit by drive-by shootings. They have health care when they get sick. They have a chance for a vocation," he said. "They have everything in jail that they should have gotten in society."

Jackson said some solutions include incentives to work and get off welfare and that an end is needed to the hopelessness of youth. Many youth see 25 as an old age because they have seen so many others die at the ages of 13, 14 and 15.

Jackson was also asked if he felt many social problems are the result of a turning away from religion.

He said a lack of moral foundation is a factor, but that environment is also a large factor. That government economic stimulus has not come as promised, while more time has been spent on the issues of gays in the military, health care and the North American Free Trade Agreement.

"They have everything in jail that they should have gotten in society."
REV. JESSE JACKSON

Jackson also was asked how he felt President Clinton was faring in office.

He said Clinton has put forth lots of caring but said he feels there needs to be more substance. A plan of priorities and action needs to be set up to solve such problems as guns on our nation's streets.

Along these lines, Jackson was asked about the Brady Bill, which recently passed Congress.

Jackson said the bill will amuse gun owners, and it will not dry up the market for weapons such as Uzis, but will simply take longer to get these weapons.

Next, Jackson was asked about the issue of school children informing school administrations, teachers and church pastors about drug dealers and other students who are carrying guns in their schools, as well as students who carry the AIDS virus and are not responsible about the disease.

Jackson said school children must know this is the right thing to do. He said children have a false sense of bonding to these students.

"Students know who has the guns, the drugs and who has AIDS," he said. "There needs to be a revolution against these things."

Jackson said AIDS victims have a moral obligation to be responsible, and others have responsibilities as well.

"Be merciful, compassionate and supportive," he said. "But don't be silent. People should be tested."

Jackson was asked about what his organization, the National Rainbow Coalition Inc., was doing about rap music and the violence Jackson has said it advocates.

Jackson said his organization is planning a conference in which they will meet with African American leaders, record labels, radio stations and rap artists.

He said they hope to convince some artists not to advocate fashionable killing, but he said he also feels people need to look at who is writing the checks in the rap business.

Finally, Jackson said he thinks some rap artists need to shift to playing another type of music.

Students respond positively to lecture

Jennifer Decker, senior in business and education, said she agreed and disagreed with points of his speech.

"I agreed on some things. Because I'm in education there needs to be more money spent on education and not in jails," Decker said. "If we teach them right from wrong when they are young, then we won't have to put more money in the prison system, and teachers need more respect. I didn't agree when he implied that when people don't turn others in for their crimes that they are just as bad, because drugs are just a complex issue that if you turn them in they might turn on you."

Brian Welch, senior in agricultural economics, said Jackson is an entertaining and controversial speaker.

"His message is definitely black, even though he says it isn't," Welch said. "The Landon Lecture is for everybody, and Jesse Jackson happens to be one of the better ones. He's able to give a speech from a black as well as an all-American perspective."

Doreen Ashworth of Manhattan said she took a day of vacation time to hear Jackson. "He was inspirational, and I agree with every word. He put all boundaries aside and talked a nonracial talk," Ashworth said.

IRA-England contacts defended as peace talks

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LONDON — The government won praise and encouragement in the House of Commons on Monday as it defended its secret contacts with the Irish Republican Army. Both sides left the door open for more exchanges.

Only Protestant lawmakers from Northern Ireland criticized the government; others across the political spectrum supported the peace initiatives.

"We shall keep exploring again and again the opportunities for peace," said Sir Patrick Mayhew, the Cabinet official responsible for Northern Ireland.

Gerry Adams, leader of Sinn Fein, the party that supports the Irish Republican Army's campaign to end British rule in the province, said he expected contacts to continue, although he accused the British government of lying and inventing excuses for not negotiating.

Mayhew and Prime Minister John Major were embarrassed over the weekend when the Observer published a document exposing the secret contacts. Some Protestant lawmakers from Northern Ireland called for the resignation of Mayhew and even Major, who had strongly denied that any talks were taking place.

Fears have been rising among Protestants in Northern Ireland that a British deal could end the province's union with Britain and make them a minority in a reunited Ireland dominated by Roman Catholics.

CATEGORIES

To help you find what you are looking for, the classified ads have been arranged by category and sub-category. All categories are marked by one of the large images, and sub-categories are preceded by a number designation.

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD

Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.

Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.

Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

Japanese economy shows no sign of quick recovery

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOKYO — Profits are down and unemployment is rising. The stock market has lost almost 20 percent of its value in the last month.

Winter has come early to the Japanese economy, and there is no promise of revival in the spring.

"The disappointment is pretty complete," said Richard Koo, senior economist at Nomura Research Institute. "Nothing on the horizon suggests an economic recovery or recovery in corporate profits. There is nothing to look forward to."

On Monday, the Tokyo Stock Market's key index plunged to its lowest level this year. After hours of panicky trading, the 225-issue Nikkei Stock Average shed 647.66 points, or 3.87 percent, to close at 16,078.71.

Even worse, analysts said the drop was not a reaction to any specific event, just the lack of good news.

It capped a month long decline of more than 3,600 points — and added to snowballing pessimism over the prospects for an economic recovery.

Consider the following:

■ In recent weeks, Japanese manufacturers reported sharp drops in profits across the board for the half-year that ended in September.

■ Many businesses have announced job cuts or cutbacks in production.

Officially, unemployment remains at 2.5 percent. But according to an Asahi Bank report, the jobless rate would be about 6.5 percent if calculated by U.S. standards.

■ Department store sales are down. Plant and equipment investment, and machinery orders, are all negative.

■ Lists of economic indicators look like a temperature chart for the North Pole — in December.

■ Japan's auto exports plunged 25 percent in October, which one industry official attributed to a prolonged slump in foreign demand and to this year's rapid appreciation of the yen.

On the positive side, prices are not rising. Consumer inflation is running about 1.4 percent annually, and producer prices are falling. Help-wanted signs appear on most Tokyo city blocks, but they are for jobs no one seems to want: waitressing, clerking and cleaning.

When Prime Minister Morihiro Hosokawa took office in August, he pledged to wipe out political corruption, promote government efficiency and revive the slumping economy, in that order.

Now he faces mounting pressure to make the economy his number-one concern.

"The market's direction depends on what the government is or isn't going to do," said Kathy Matsui, strategist at Barclays de Zoete Wedd. "So far, it just sits smack there and seems to do nothing."

One possible move would be to set aside political-reform legislation, which appears headed for trouble in the upper house, and enact an income-tax cut.

Economists disagree, however, whether a tax cut would have much effect. Many believe thrifty consumers would just sock the extra money away instead of spending it. And cutting income taxes would force the highly unpopular move of raising sales taxes.

Still, some argue that doing anything is better than doing nothing.

"It's worth a try," Koo said. "Hope can be very useful."

Another idea being considered is channeling funds to small- and medium-sized businesses hardest hit by the downturn.

So far, however, the economy has resisted all the usual cures.

Public-works spending has grown by an average 14 percent in the past three years, 21 percent in 1993. And the discount rate is at its lowest level ever — 1.75 percent — but investment has not picked up.

Despite the bad news, Hosokawa's government is enjoying record high popularity ratings — more than 70 percent in most polls.

Allies disagree on Bosnian issues

ASSOCIATED PRESS

ROME — Secretary of State Warren Christopher began his third trip to Europe Monday again in disagreement with U.S. allies on how to deal with the war in Bosnia.

Christopher was determined to keep up an economic blockade of Serbia to try to force a settlement of the 19-month conflict.

But the Europeans, led by Germany and France, were considering an easing of the sanctions.

Under the European plan, the sanctions would be eased if Bosnian Serbs agreed to return to the Muslims 3 to 4 percent more territory than the Muslim-led government would retain under international peace proposals.

On another Bosnia issue, Christopher was expected to announce new U.S. assistance for Bosnians who have lost their homes in the fighting or have been pushed out as part of ethnic cleansing.

"There can be no movement toward moderating sanctions until a Bosnia settlement has been reached and the international community sees that it is being implemented," Christopher said through representative Michael McCurry on the flight from Washington.

Hedging U.S. opposition a bit, the statement also said the Clinton administration would reserve final judgment on sanctions until they see whether some conduct on the ground warrants movement on sanctions.

This means that the United States wants the Bosnian Serbs, who have taken some 70 percent of the former Yugoslav republic, to show they are willing to make concessions.

That would include permitting unhindered delivery of food, medicine and other supplies to tens of thousands of civilians imperiled by the bite of what promises to be a rough winter.

On two previous trips to Europe, Christopher differed with the allies over Bosnia-Herzegovina. They refused to approve a U.S. proposal to clear the way for weapon shipments to the Muslim-led government and to bomb Serb artillery sites.

As a result, the U.S. plan was shelved, giving rise to criticism of Clinton administration foreign policy as timid and also neglectful of trapped civilians.

The disagreement over sanctions may be only academic. Bosnian Serb leaders have given no indication publicly they would accept the European overture.

"This is our territory. This is our land," Serb leader Radovan Karadzic said Sunday.

At the same time, Alija Izetbegovic, the republic's president, said, "If the Serb side does not return territories, sanctions should be tightened and not lifted."

On Tuesday, Christopher will address a foreign ministers meeting of the 53-nation Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe, and he is expected to push for a broader role for the conference in preventing conflicts in Europe.

He also is expected to use the speech to announce a new U.S. aid program for the Bosnians, who already have received more than $400 million in American aid.

"The United States will continue to do its part in supporting the humanitarian relief effort," McCurry said.

Christopher's next stop is Brussels, Belgium, where he will meet on Wednesday with ministers of the European Community and on Thursday with NATO ministers. Bosnia will head the agenda along with peacekeeping measures, including wider use of Russian troops in Georgia and other former Soviet republics.

The ministers are expected to approve a U.S. initiative to permit former Warsaw Pact countries to participate in NATO exercises.

KSUPD to restructure position

MIKE HIND
Collegian

The K-State Police Department will again have a director at its helm.

The director's position was halted eight years ago when the duties were redistributed through the captain's rank, John Lambert, director of public safety, said.

John McAuliffe, former director of public safety at Central Michigan University, took over the position of director at K-State Nov. 18.

"We really felt that the director position gives the department a better direction, and the addition of a director will help to improve operations," Lambert said.

Lambert said he felt McAuliffe's credentials as a former director would help in the management of the department.

"McAuliffe brings to this new position many years of service at a campus similar to this size," Lambert said.

The department's restructuring will put campus police Capt. Charles Beckom in charge of coordination of security measures for special events, criminal investigations and community services.

McAuliffe said he feels there are some aspects of the police department that don't keep with the campus' friendly atmosphere.

"Look at the front door of the police station," McAuliffe said. "It doesn't make people feel welcome.

"Our waiting area sort of asks people 'see if you can find a place to sit,'" McAuliffe said. "I want to upgrade our image and make the facilities more presentable."

McAuliffe said the recent attacks on students outside the Natatorium and Anderson Hall are serious incidents, but the campus as a whole is relatively safe.

"If you were to compare K-State's crime statistics with those of other campuses your size you would find that we have it pretty good here at K-State," McAuliffe said.

McAuliffe also addressed the issue of goal-post destruction after K-State football victories.

"It is something the police department and the athletic department will have to work more closely on in the future," McAuliffe said. "After the athletic department asked the students to leave the goal posts alone with editorials, they remained standing after the last win."

NEWS DIGEST

▶VICTIM OF ASSAULT TO BE RELEASED FROM HOSPITAL

The K-State student who was assaulted outside Ahearn Natatorium Nov. 18 is scheduled to be released from the hospital this week.

Hai Huang, a graduate student in regional and community planning, was attacked as he was walking home from studying on campus between 11:30 p.m. and midnight.

Huang suffered a skull fracture and injuries to his face. He was taken to St. Francis Hospital in Topeka, where he underwent surgery to relieve brain swelling.

Richard Herrman, University detective, said the campus police have not identified a suspect. He said the police department has collected some evidence and had several clues as to who the attacker was.

Huang said he cannot remember who attacked him.

Herrman said he suspected the reason for the attack was theft. A bag containing some books was taken from Huang. The bag was later found by the police, but some of its contents were missing.

Huang said he would like to return to K-State and finish the semester, but he did not know if he would be physically able to do so. He said he still has pain from his injuries and suffers from some memory loss.

"I will come back to K-State," Huang said. "But I hope the police can find the person who attacked me.

"I hope the campus can be safe for students. A campus cannot be good if there is fear."

Huang, an international student from mainland China, said his classmates and professors had been very helpful to him.

"I am here in a foreign place away from my family," he said. "It has been hard, but my friends and professors have encouraged me."

This incident was the fourth assault on campus this semester.

▶BOARD OF REGENTS CHOOSES DIRECTOR

The Kansas Board of Regents selected Stephen Jordan as its executive director last week.

Jordan, deputy executive director for finance and planning for the Arizona Board of Regents, will take over the position on Jan. 10.

Before Jordan assumed his duties in 1989, he was the vice chancellor of budget and facilities at the University of Colorado Health Sciences Center for four years.

He has a Ph.D. from the University of Denver and a master's in public administration from the University of Colorado.

A board-appointed committee narrowed a field of 65 applicants to three in November.

The regents interviewed the three applicants at their November meeting.

Warren Corman, director of facilities for the regents, has served as interim executive director since former director Stanley Koplik left the position in September to take a job as the chancellor of the University of Massachusetts system.

Lorene Spurlock, graduate student in dance, performs a dance piece titled "Unfolding Chair Stories" Tuesday night in Nichols Theatre with other cast members during a rehearsal of the Kansas State Repertory Dance Company's WinterDance '93. Vera Orlock, assistant professor of dance, choreographed the piece, which she says deals with communication and distortion themes.

Live music, a cast of 50 and the work of three guest artists will come together to make Kansas State Repertory Dance Company's WinterDance '93 a total theater experience.

Doris Bennet-Glasper, dancer, choreographer and co-director of the Katherine Dunham Children's Workshop in East St. Louis, Ill., spent three weeks at K-State teaching the Dunham technique and choreographing two pieces for WinterDance.

One of Glasper's pieces, "Monkey and the Tiger," will feature Kenya Ajanaku, professional drummer and storyteller, and the Ebony Theatre Co. in the telling of this African fairy tale.

Achmed Valk, director of the K-State dance program, said Ajanaku will perform part of a program he presented at the Juneteenth Festival this summer at Bramlage Coliseum. He will demonstrate some of his African instruments and lead the audience in a call-and-response African song.

"Hopefully, we'll get the whole audience stamping and clapping along," Valk said.

The other piece in the "African Suite" is "Rain Forest," which Glasper said was a welcome dance originally choreographed by Katherine Dunham and performed at the White House Conference on Children.

Glasper left before Thanksgiving to perform in Italy, but Valk arranged — with the help of the Student Governing Association Fine Arts Council, Manhattan Arts Council and other campus departments — to have Ajanaku as a guest artist for the WinterDance.

"As Doris couldn't be here, I wanted to have a guest performer here, so I asked him back," Valk said. "He's worked with the Dunham method."

Valk also choreographed a set of pieces called "Trysts & Trespasses" to the music of Glenn Grayson, who will play the piano for one of the pieces.

Grayson is the musical director and technical supervisor of music for the Mirage Hotel in Las Vegas. He composes music and sound effects for the Siegfried and Roy Show and the Treasure Island Pirate Show, using the world's largest Synclavier Digital Audio System.

In addition, Cora Cooper, assistant professor of music, will conduct four Manhattan musicians in Grayson's string quartet piece, "Variations on a Shadow."

WINTERDANCE

Time: 8 p.m.
Date: Dec. 2-4
Place: Nichols Theatre

For tickets and reservation information, contact the McCain Box Office at 532-6428.

Valk worked with Grayson at the University of Nevada-Las Vegas. He said Grayson will be covering all costs for his appearance at K-State.

"That's a wonderful donation to our program," Valk said.

Vera Orlock, assistant professor of dance in her first year at K-State, choreographed a piece called "Unfolding Chair Stories," which she said deals with the themes of communication and distortion.

She said one of the stories evolved from her students' Michael Jackson impressions. Orlock said she used these movements in the piece "Express Yourself."

"It's my interpretation of their interpretation of Michael Jackson, arranged in time and space," Orlock said.

Luke Kahlich, professor of dance and theater, choreographed two modern dances, "Touching Down" and "On the Ice." He said "On the Ice" has an environmental message and revolves around the issue of clubbing seals.

"It's a statement of how we don't take care of nature," Kahlich said, "how a lot of times we don't realize that we're doing things without thinking about the consequences."

Government announces renewed war on AIDS

BRIEFLY

■ The AIDS research budget was raised this year by 21 percent to $1.3 billion

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The government will enlist experts from private industry, academia and activist groups to help remove obstacles to the discovery of new drugs to combat AIDS, Health and Human Services Secretary Donna Shalala said Tuesday.

Shalala said her new task force will bring high-level collaboration among leaders in the field.

"It is time to refocus and re-energize our best minds for a concerted attack on this killer," she said at the National Institutes of Health on the eve of World AIDS Day. "We have to lock arms to move forward."

The AIDS Action Council, a lobby that represents more than 1,000 AIDS service organizations, said the initiative is an important step.

But an organizer from Act Up, an AIDS activist group, described it as smoke and mirrors.

"Where's the Manhattan Project? ... Where's the action?" Act Up's Wayne Turner demanded of Shalala.

"We see this as an action item," replied the health secretary, who said the Clinton administration and Congress raised the AIDS research budget this year by 21 percent to $1.3 billion.

Shalala was joined by the heads of the Public Health Service, the National Institutes of Health and the Food and Drug Administration as well as Kristine Gebbie, the White House national AIDS policy coordinator, and Dr. Roy Vagelos, the chairman of Merck Inc., the world's largest pharmaceutical company.

"Merely creating a new committee doesn't make a miracle happen," Gebbie said.

But she added that this collaboration "really increases our confidence that we will ... stop this epidemic."

Shalala named her top health deputy, Dr. Philip Lee, the head of the Public Health Service, to chair the National Task Force on AIDS Drug Development. She will appoint another 14 members later.

The task force's mission is to identify and remove any barriers or obstacles to developing effective treatment, Shalala said.

There are only three anti-retroviral drugs on the market — AZT, ddI and ddC — to treat HIV infections and 11 other drugs to treat AIDS-related illnesses.

At best they only slow the progress of the invariably fatal disease or spare victims some of its ravages.

"These drugs do make a difference. ... but they're clearly not the answer," Vagelos said.

Merck and 14 other major drug companies last April agreed to share information and supplies of experimental AIDS treatments.

Although the FDA has received hundreds of applications to investigate possible new treatments, none has advanced beyond early clinical trials.

"The sad fact today is that not a single new drug application for an anti-retroviral agent awaits FDA approval," Shalala said.

Dr. Anthony Fauci, the government's top AIDS scientist and head of the National Institute of Allergies and Infectious Diseases, said he was not sure whether bureaucratic obstacles do stand in the way of new discoveries.

But Fauci said the task force will perform an important service if it

Week coordinators stress AIDS testing

LEIGH NEVANS

Some students are walking around campus wearing red ribbons to signal AIDS awareness.

This is AIDS awareness week at K-State, and to bring attention to the disease as well as educate students, people are sitting at a table in the Union and giving out information.

The first step to education is to get tested for the human immunodeficiency virus (HIV).

Some people might be scared to get a HIV test for fear of the results.

"If an individual told me they didn't want to know, I'd tell them to think of future partners you're putting at risk," said Kelley Fink, health educator at Lafene Health Center. "We can't just think of ourselves. We have to think about other people, too.

"The only way to know for sure is to get tested," she said.

The cost of a HIV test at Lafene is $28. The process at Lafene is confidential but not anonymous, Fink said.

The individual will see a physician who will explain the testing process. They will discuss the risk level of the individual and go over information about HIV. Then they will talk over what a positive or negative result means.

They also discuss the emotions involved and watch some videos, Fink said.

"It's important for the individual to understand that a positive result is possible," she said.

The cost of a HIV test at the Riley County Health Department is $20, and it is anonymous and confidential. Everything is done

CLINTON TOBACCO TAX DEBATED

Lawmakers are debating President Clinton's proposed 99-cent tobacco tax to pay for health care. If the current 24-cent U.S. tax were closer to Canada's $3 a pack, some lawmakers feel that many non-smokers would never start lighting up.

Southern union leaders interpreted a Price-Waterhouse study to conclude that the 75-cent tax increase would destroy 81,672 jobs.

- 43.3 million Americans smoke.
- Smoking is responsible for 30 percent of all cancers and 87 percent of all lung cancers.
- The 25-44 age group has the highest smoking rate at 30.4 percent. This number is down from 33 percent in 1990.
- 25 percent of adults 18 and older smoke.
- 13.6 percent of people with a college education smoke.

Schools may receive increase in funding

TOPEKA (AP) — An advisory committee agreed today that the state should probably increase its spending on public schools.

But members of the Kansas Committee on School District Finance and Quality Performance couldn't settle on a figure to recommend to the Legislature.

The committee discussed financing for more than an hour without reaching any firm conclusions. The best members could do was to endorse a recommendation that the Legislature consider increased funding.

"This is a perfect way to sweep it under the rug and not make a decision," Sen. Phil Martin, D-Pittsburg, said.

The State Board of Education already has proposed the amount of general state aid to Kansas' 304 school districts be increased by 3 percent, or $57.9 million.

Olathe woman pleads guilty to killing child

OLATHE (AP) — An Olathe woman has pleaded guilty to the child-abuse killing of a 4-year-old boy in a case that closed down one of Johnson County's most active foster homes.

Kimberlee A. Lee, 37, also pleaded no contest and was found guilty Monday of two counts of abusing Douglas Brumley, her adoptive brother, in the weeks before his death and of lying to police about how he was fatally injured on Oct. 16, 1992.

She will have to spend at least 13 years in prison as part of the plea agreement made in Johnson County District Court.

Charges are pending against her husband, David W. Lee, who admitted to police after the killing that the child did not fall down steps as the Lees initially claimed.

Kimberlee Lee pleaded guilty to second-degree murder for killing Douglas, who died of a blow to his abdomen that ruptured his small intestine and spilled its contents into his abdominal cavity.

After Douglas' death, the state stopped sending foster children to live with Kimberlee Lee's parents, Alberta and Delmar Brumley. The Brumleys had taken in about 150 foster children in the decade they served as foster parents.

Kimberlee Lee's brother, Michael A. Miller, is already in a Kansas prison for the murder of a small child. He is serving a 15-year-to-life sentence for the 1983 beating death of his girlfriend's 16-month-old son.

Anti-fur group claims responsibility for fires

CHICAGO (AP) — An animal-rights group claimed responsibility for planting fire-starting devices at four department stores over the weekend because the retailers sell furs.

Police found eight devices at Neiman-Marcus, Saks Fifth Avenue, Marshall Fields and Carson Pirie Scott stores downtown. Small fires ignited at three stores, said arson Detective Lee DeMars of the Chicago Police Department. The fires were contained, and no one was hurt. All stores were open for business Sunday and Monday.

The Animal Liberation Front claimed responsibility in a faxed message relayed through another group, People for the Ethical Treatment of Animals.

The FBI and police were checking the statement's authenticity.

In search of the elusive black squirrel

Got a weekend free and looking for a road trip? Off the Shoulder is a travel guide for those students looking for adventure and the slightly weird.

Last week, spontaneity and the desire to get out of town lead us "off the shoulder" to Marysville, Kan., only an hour long drive from K-State.

After passing two dead possums, a dead rodent, a smelly dead skunk and one unidentified carcass, we arrived safely in Marysville.

"Welcome to Marysville, Black Squirrel City," read the sign next to the water tower.

A historical marker outside of Marysville recounts the legends behind Marysville's black squirrels.

One said a boy turned a cage full of black squirrels loose at the McMahon Carnival in 1912. Others say wild black squirrels were seen in Balderson Township as early as the late 1800s.

Plastic deer, bent-over-grannies fannies, plastic squirrels and sunflower wind-catchers were our first encounter with Marysville culture.

Hunger pangs led us to our first stop in the city.

Carolyn's Kitchen had a relaxed setting to it, and we had a good idea that we might find some locals who could tell us about the town.

"Coffee, Melanie?" one waitress asked when a customer sat down at a table.

It was obvious that it was a place "where everybody knows your name."

Our waitress, Margie Reed, took our order, and before we knew it, our homestyle breakfast was served.

Breakfast was served hot and fast, but for the price we paid for the meal, consisting of an egg, hashbrowns and toast, we were disappointed at the small portions of hashbrowns.

If you are looking for a relaxed atmosphere and friendly service, but aren't too concerned about the price you pay for a small quantity, then Carolyn's Kitchen is a good place to go.

Before we left, Margie suggested we visit the Historic Courthouse on Broadway Street.

"Plastic deer, bent-over-grannies fannies, plastic squirrels and sunflower wind-catchers were out first encounter with Marysville culture."

The Romanesque, red-brick courthouse easily distinguishes itself from other buildings in the area by its copper-capped tower.

Evelyn Taylor, museum curator, said the courthouse was built in 1891 and turned into a museum in 1979. Each room represents cities in Marshall County during the 1800s, including some ghost towns.

We found the museum to be very interesting and one of our favorite places in Marysville. There was a variety of displays, including a schoolhouse setting, ghost towns, the original courtroom and old newspaper printing presses.

Taylor said each town in the county has a room, and that town is supposed to take care of it.

Swing sets, slides and jungle gyms are not the only attractions at the Marysville City Park, we discovered. A Sod House, Little Red School House and Union Pacific steam locomotive are all on display next to one another, depicting life in the earlier days.

We were disappointed that there was no explanation as to what the significance of these remnants of the past were doing in the park. Instead, we just ended up getting mud on our shoes and making a mess of the floormats.

We recommend staying in the car to see these sights because you can get the same effect and keep your shoes clean.

Driving down the main drag of town, a soda shop caught our attention as a good place to quench our thirst.

Mo & Jo's Soda Shoppe on Broadway depicts the '50s in its entirety with old-fashioned fountain drinks, ice cream creations, and the homemade pies and food.

James Dean, Marilyn Monroe and "Casablanca" posters on the walls set the atmosphere of the '50s-style soda shop.

Our personal favorites were the strawberry phosphate and cherry-limeade fountain drinks.

This place was definitely cool, making us feel as if we were living in the past while drinking our '50s-style drinks. The prices were pretty reasonable.

Upon leaving the soda shop, we window-shopped down Broadway. At the end of Broadway, before the railroad tracks, we spotted the Wagon Wheel and went for more food.

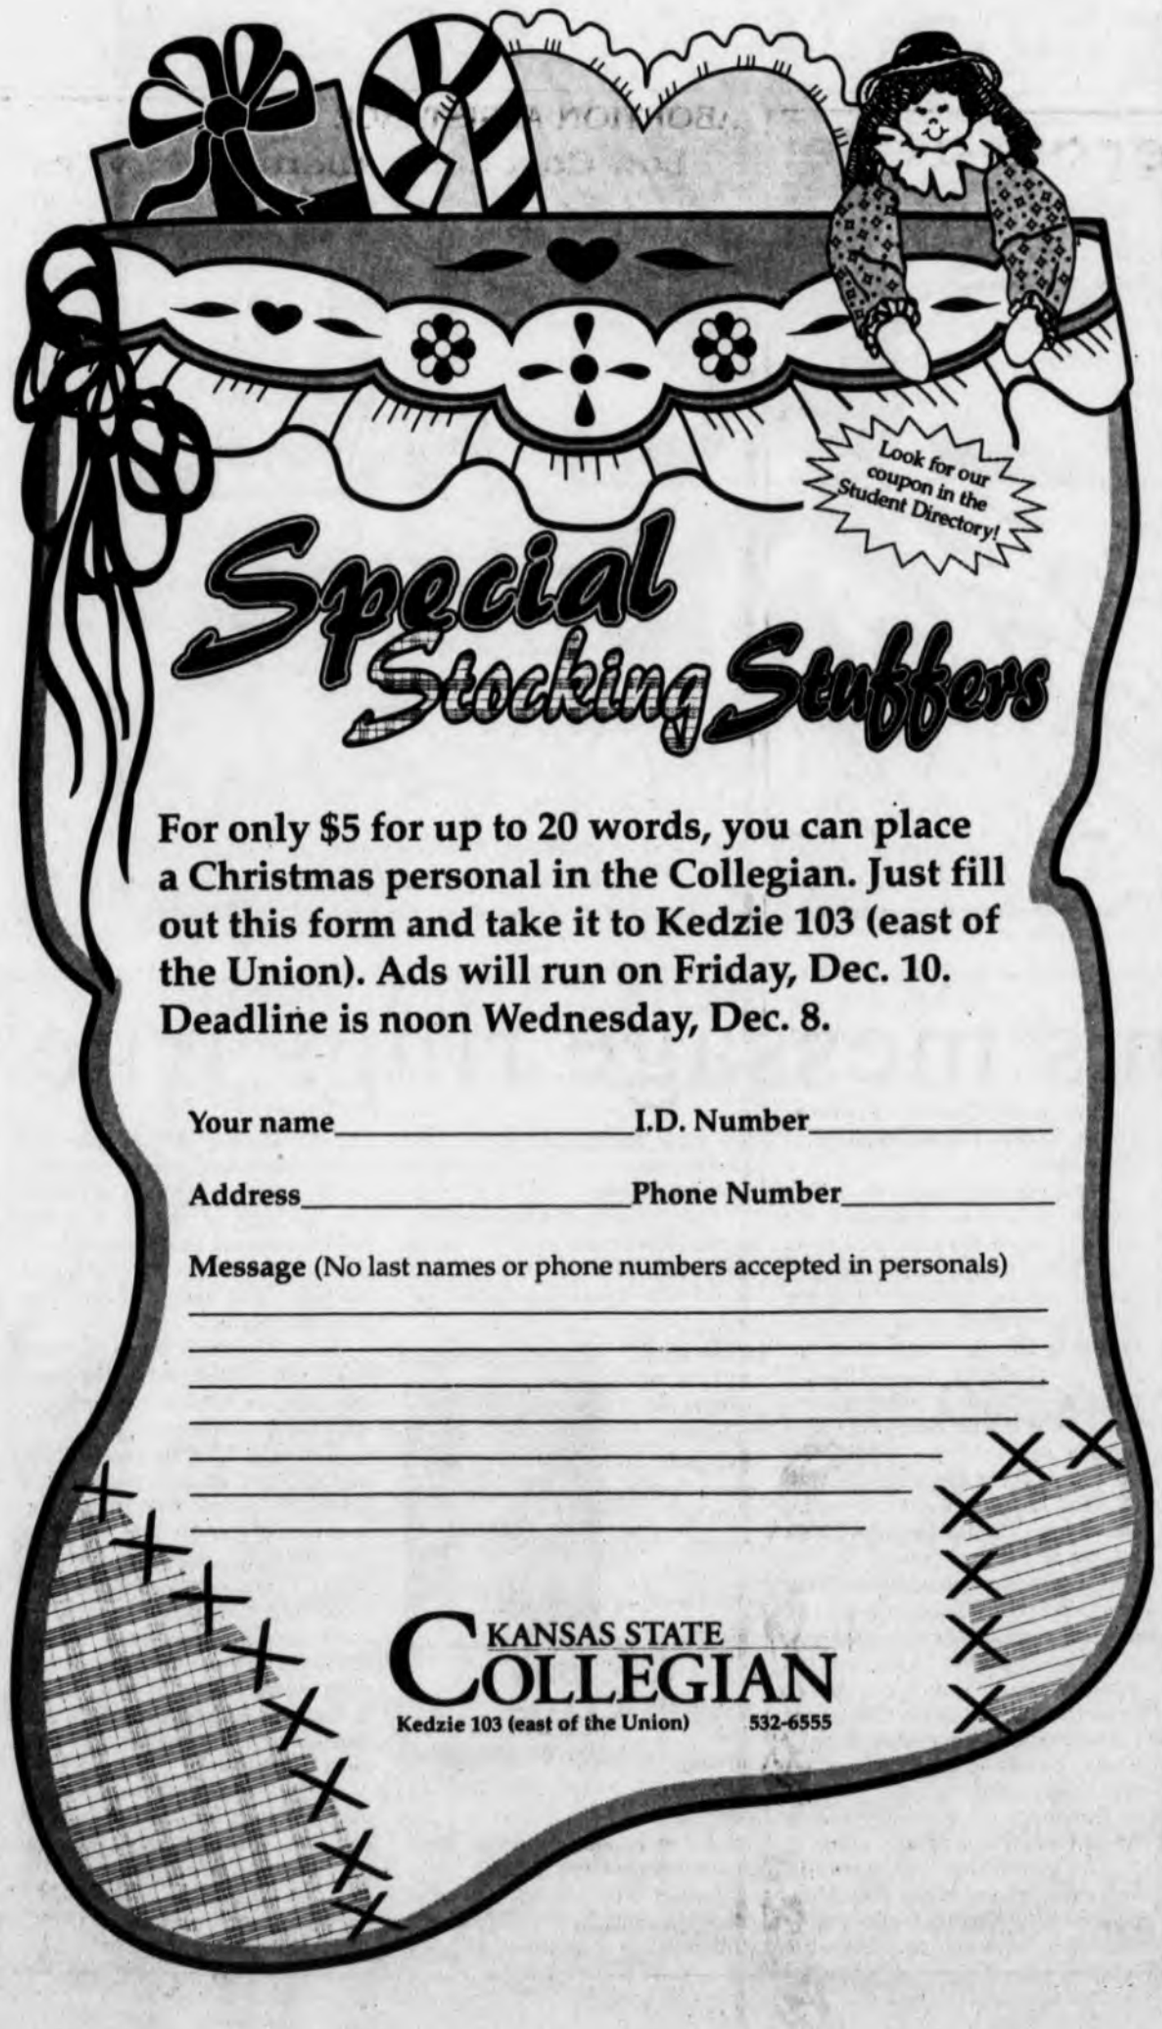
The Wagon Wheel provides an alternative to country bars in Manhattan and is equipped with a full-sized bar, country dance floor, game room and a three-course menu. It is decorated fully in wood, with Budweiser paraphernalia everywhere.

Old, wrinkled dollar bills are stapled to the ceiling as remnants of a former St. Patrick's Day livestock nut fry, our waitress, Janis Edwards, said.

We ordered grilled chicken with fries from the menu, and although it was delicious, we later regretted not trying the homemade chili after seeing many of the locals eating it. We'd like to get a group of friends together and experience the nightlife of the Wagon Wheel.

On our way out of town, we made one last stop to the Pony Express Ranch, a home-cured meat factory.

The meat factory offers a variety of old-fashioned smoked meats.



We couldn't help taking seconds of the free samples of hickory-smoked summer sausage, which was awesome. We kept going back for more samples and eventually bought some Italian sausage and beef jerky and left Marysville.

We hope to someday return to the "Black Squirrel City" and visit attractions that we were unable to see, such as the notorious animal that gives Marysville its nickname.

City of Manhattan should include K-State campus

K-State administrators should make sure the issue of annexation of K-State by the city of Manhattan is not forgotten by the Manhattan City Commission.

The issue of K-State's campus being annexed by Manhattan was raised at a recent Manhattan City Commission meeting.

The issue has been raised numerous times before, only to be set aside and eventually forgotten.

There is no denying that a city benefits from a financially stable university, and a university benefits from a financially stable city.

The state's two other largest universities, Wichita State and KU, have always been within the city limits of Wichita and Lawrence.

The annexation could bring Manhattan $270,000 in additional tax revenue.

University officials have already indicated they would want to keep its campus police force, remain in control of campus zoning and limit Manhattan's ordinance enforcement on K-State property, allowing state law to prevail.

The City Commission has indicated it favors the provisions as requested by K-State, agreeing also to keep the cost of annexation to a minimum, which is favorable for K-State students who are facing a 9-percent increase in tuition.

If annexation takes place, students living in residence halls and apartments on campus would be considered Manhattan residents.

This would increase the city's population by an estimated 5,000 people. An increase in population would enable the city to contend for more government programs.

If hall residents are considered Manhattan residents, they will be eligible to vote. This increase in potential voters could have a significant impact on city ordinances, such as landlord-tenant laws.

If you have questions or concerns about the annexation of K-State by Manhattan, contact the Manhattan City Commission or Robert Krause, vice president of Institutional Advancement, at 532-5942.

A FOUR-LETTER WORD

AIDS.

It is such a short word. A brief word. A killing word. It is a word that has cut to the very heart of every belief system in the world, making all societies deal with such issues as homosexuality, drug abuse and health care on a global level.

It is a word that has burned down houses, been responsible for getting healthy people badly hurt and hurt people killed. It has kept children out of school, united communities and divided churches.

It is this little four-letter word that we, as a generation, have had looming over us since the outset of our adolescence. We found our sexual beginnings about the same time as the disease, living through our phases of discovery, confusion and fear at the same time the epidemic did.

From the classroom to the bedroom, we have been shaped by growing up with AIDS in ways that we will probably never truly realize. And we have all dealt with living under the gun of this nightmare in different ways.

Some of us have championed the causes of education and prevention. We have become members of ACT-UP and other groups to protest the lack of medicine available in this country. We have staffed hospices. We have become peer educators at Lafene Health Center, taking the time and extending the effort not only to educate ourselves but also our peers.

Some of us have chosen to ignore the problem. Despite the Center for Disease Control estimating 1 million people are HIV positive, there are still students who have unprotected sex with many different partners. Even though there were 962 cases of AIDS reported in Kansas alone as of June 1993, 80 percent of those infected on this campus don't know they have it.

Three professors and one student have died here because of the AIDS virus, and yet I know students who don't insist on condoms because they are young, and they are healthy, and they are invincible.

God, I could spout numbers all day. I could stand on a soap box outside of Anderson Hall and scream these horrifying statistics over and over again, and I would not change people's minds or habits. Believe me, if I thought for an instant I could do something that way, I would be out there in a hot New York minute.

But my voice is not going to be the voice that is heard when you are in the mood. My voice ranting outside Wefald's office is not going to make you stop and think when the football team is going to a bowl game or someone has had too much to drink.

ERIN MANSUR-SMITH

It has to be the image of your body with bright purple and red splotches all over it, and not any voice or any commercial, that changes the course of this modern plague.

It has to be the picture of your mother's face when she holds your head as you vomit. Or your father's as he picks out your casket.

It has to be the idea of being fed through a tube or trying to find treatments to make you better when you know there aren't any available to make you think as you take that stranger's offer. Or the idea of trying to keep a job when your boss finds out what is causing that cough.

Ultimately, it is the picture of your friends, your family or the one you love having to watch as AIDS takes you away from them inch by inch, as much as any fact or figure, to make you take that extra step to protect yourself.

It has to be you educating yourself. It has to be you taking care of yourself to save you and those who mean anything to you from knowing how much that little word, AIDS, really hurts. How much that little word kills.

If you think you need a reminder every now and then, wear a red ribbon.

▶ EDUCATORS

Teachers should take a few teaching classes

Editor,

Most of K-State's professors, associate professors, assistant professors and instructors do not have degrees in education. Rather, they possess degrees in their field of study.

Unfortunately, this does not give the college educator the knowledge on how to teach the material effectively.

I have encountered many intelligent professors who know everything there is to know about a subject but have no idea how to present it to their students.

People with a degree other than education cannot teach elementary or secondary education, yet they can teach college courses. Is it too much to expect a college educator to have a background in education, even if it is just a few courses?

I would hope not.

Jackson's message rings true

The Rev. Jesse Jackson delivered his Landon Lecture to a packed Bramlage Coliseum on Monday. His topic was violent crime. Although I usually favor a different approach to public policy than Jackson, I found his spirited address to be very insightful.

In our fight against violent crime, Jackson said that we first need a spiritual foundation and then more time and resources.

He also said that poverty is not the sole cause of violent crime. He argued that greed, mindless materialism and fear are more significant causes. He continued to downplay the importance of poverty by challenging the audience to not just focus on poverty but on moral and ethical issues as well.

Jackson is absolutely right. But I've learned that in discussions about faith, values and ethics, you run the risk of being labeled intolerant, narrow-minded and anti-intellectual, all labels contrary to the goals of the University. Labels don't matter.

Real transformation cannot occur without a discussion of those ideas.

Jackson said transformation must begin with the individual. He quoted part of Romans 12:1 from the Bible and challenged the audience to be transformed by the renewing of their minds. He also challenged the audience to develop character, using Christ's parable entitled the Good Samaritan (Luke 10:25-37) as a model.

It was clear from his lecture that Jackson believes social change cannot occur without relying on a higher power.

I was surprised when early in his lecture Jackson asked the audience of 6,000 to stand and join him in prayer. Although his prayer was generic, never referring to God or Christ, it represented a dependence on a higher power to guide us toward real progress.

Following Christ is a revolutionary idea in our culture.

The popular humanistic approach, which is the prevailing philosophy on most university campuses, says that no problem is too great for man to solve. The abstract notion of god is a crutch for weak people.

This is why the humanistic world-view is unsound: We are an imperfect race in an imperfect world with imperfect solutions to our problems. I will put my faith in the humanist approach when I meet a perfect person.

JOHN HART

Christ is much more than a crutch for weak people. He is an infinite source of power for weak people. And we are all weak in our unique ways.

Jesus Christ was the leader of the civil-rights movement. Martin Luther King Jr. followed Christ. He built his philosophy of nonviolent social change squarely on the life and teachings of Christ. The success of the civil-rights movement of the '60s is best measured by thousands of changed attitudes and hearts, not on the passage of laws.

That movement would not have been successful had it not been built on, as Jackson explained, a spiritual foundation.

Lectures like Jackson's that address the tremendous social problems of our day frequently leave the audience with a challenge to change the world. Inevitably, that emotional motivation evaporates.

When it does, our cynical attitudes toward society harden even more, locking us into a cycle of inaction. Jackson described this inaction as a "code of silence" that must be broken.

As individuals we would have much more peace and progress if we jettisoned the goal of changing the world — ending crime or violence — and instead focused on changing ourselves. Then, social change would follow.

Israel, PLO work for peace despite clashes of violence

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KHAN YUNIS, Occupied Gaza Strip — Palestinians hurled rocks and burned tires Tuesday to protest the army's attacks on PLO gunners and the lack of progress in peace talks with Israel. Soldiers answered with gunfire, wounding 65 Palestinians.

It was the bloodiest day of street battles since the Israel-PLO accord was signed Sept. 13.

Hundreds of makeshift barriers blocked roads to enforce a three-day general strike called by the Palestine Liberation Organization. Clouds of smoke from burning rubber rose over the Gaza Strip.

The violence reflected Palestinians' growing frustration over the lack of change and threatened to complicate negotiations on the handover of Gaza and Jerico on the West Bank scheduled to start Dec. 13.

Still, two meetings held Tuesday reflected continued efforts toward peace.

Maj. Gen. Matan Vilnai, the Gaza Strip military commander, met with five PLO leaders in Gaza to discuss a cease-fire, and a top aide to Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin arrived in Tunis for talks with PLO chief Yasser Arafat.

In Gaza, the PLO leaders demanded the army stop shooting Palestinians, stop hunting members of the Fatah Hawks, release jailed Hawks and reduce its presence in Gaza. The Hawks are the military wing of Arafat's Fatah faction.

"We hope the bloodshed will be stopped. We have agreed on practical steps to solve the situation," PLO leader Sufian Abu Zaydeh said after the meeting.

He would not give details.

Rabin, who is touring Europe, suggested the violence was part of a war of nerves to pressure Israel.

"We must aspire to a calming because it is an important condition to continuing the negotiations," he told Israel radio.

Rabin said the army would press its campaign against armed vigilantes who try to derail the talks with attacks on Israelis, but he appeared to be referring to Muslim militants and radical PLO groups, not to the Fatah Hawks.

The latest violence was triggered by the killing Sunday of a Hawk, Ahmed Abu Rish, in Khan Yunis. Abu Rish had laid down his arms and surrendered publicly last week, but army sources said he was with armed men in a car when he was shot to death by an undercover unit.

His killing was viewed by Palestinians as a violation of a truce agreement, and Rabin and senior army commanders suggested it was a mistake.

The Fatah Hawks, whose leader Taisir Bardini was captured Monday, announced they would resume attacks against Israelis.

The Hawks have about 550 armed members. Leaders of the uprising that began in December 1987, they began surrendering to the army after Sept. 13 in support of the peace process.

In the Rafah refugee camp, five Hawks met with reporters in a back-alley shack Tuesday, each nervously playing with a pistol or an assault rifle.

"As long as the Israelis are hunting us, we will continue fighting them," Arafat Abu Shabab said. "If the Israelis will stop hunting us, we will stop shooting."

Salim al-Wafi, a Hawks leader who has been involved in attacks on Israeli soldiers, said troops raided his house and beat his mother last week. He vowed he would not stop his armed struggle because "I'm on the killing list."

Throughout the interview, shots were heard outside.

The meeting was halted abruptly when lookouts yelled special forces, a warning that Israeli undercover troops were near.

The Fatah Hawks said they supported the peace talks but demanded guaranteed amnesty. They didn't rule out collaborating with Muslim and radical PLO groups if their demands were refused.

The clashes with the army were widespread Tuesday, most involving children and teenagers.

In Khan, near the home of Abu Rish, soldiers opened fire on Palestinians who began hurling rocks and jeering at four army jeeps after unconfirmed reports spread that an 11-year-old boy had been wounded in the eye by a bullet.

Subsidized AIDS test available at Lafene

by a number, and a personal visit is needed to get results.

One thing to consider is that the Riley County tests are subsidized by the federal government, which is why they cost less, Fink said.

"The blood test available tests for the presence of antibody to HIV; it is not a test for AIDS. .," according to a pamphlet called "AIDS ... What everyone should know."

Because of what is called a window period, there is such a thing as false negative. A window period is the time frame from when a person becomes infected to the time that the person can show postive test results. Usually, this amount of time is approximately six weeks to six months, Fink said.

"This can be a false sense of security," she said.

People should wait out the window period while practicing no risky behaviors before being tested again.

Once an individual has been tested, it takes Lafene about seven days to two weeks to get the results back.

"It's a long time to worry about it," Fink said. "It's very stressful, but it's a big issue that has to be addressed.

"If you're tested positive, it is important to receive on-going care immediately. If your health is monitored early, it can prolong your life — as well as the quality of your life."

There are four ways to transmit the disease: sexual intercourse (oral, anal and vaginal); contaminated blood or blood products, like transfusions; intravenous drug-use and sharing contaminated needles; and from mother to child by breast milk or child birth.

If there is any exchange of bodily fluids, there is a risk of contracting the disease. Body fluids are vaginal secretions, blood, semen and breast milk. HIV cannot be obtained through sweat or saliva, Fink said.

"It takes anywhere from six weeks to 15 years from being infected to getting AIDS," Fink said. "For most people, it's between three to five years to develop full-blown AIDS."

The difference between HIV and AIDS is that HIV is a virus that causes AIDS. AIDS is a syndrome.

HIV has no symptoms, but with AIDS, there are symptoms. According to the pamphlet "What everyone should know about AIDS," some of these symptoms are swollen lymph glands, recurring fever, "night sweats," rapid weight loss for no apparent reason, constant fatigue and white spots or blemishes in the mouth.

Working with a physician in getting proper nutrition and a good exercise program helps, Fink said.

A drug like AZT could help prolong the lives of people with AIDS and delay the onset of symptoms in people with HIV, according to the pamphlet "What everyone should know about AIDS."

"There is no cure," Fink said. "They are testing vaccines, but nothing has been determined."

There are four key prevention methods: self-education, not sharing needles, abstaining from sex and using condoms consistently and correctly, she said.

Fink suggested some things for people entering into relationships: only enter into monogamous relationships; have good communication between partners and discuss each other's sexual histories; go together and get tested for all sexually transmitted diseases, including HIV; talk about methods of contraception; and always use a condom.

Condoms make it safer, but not 100-percent safe, she said.

"Our goal is to show proper use of a condom," Fink said. "We want them (students) to be informed consumers.

"We want to prevent people from getting it in the first place.

"If a student tested positive, Lafene will help that person contact all previous sexual partners," Fink said. "This is really important."

People could be walking around carrying the HIV virus and not know they have it, she said.

"You can't tell by looking at a person if they have the disease," Fink said.

A person with HIV might look and feel fine, but people rarely see someone with AIDS, because they do not go out in public due to their illness, she said.

"Many people feel it can't happen to them," Fink said.

According to national statistics, one in every 250 college students has HIV. If it were broken down, anywhere from 60 to 90 students at K-State could have HIV. At K-State, three faculty members have died from AIDS-related symptoms, and one student died last spring from the disease.

simply ensures that the scientists and regulators do not overlook any promising approach.

"We can, we must, and we will do better," pledged Lee, who said the task force will have its first meeting by February or March.

"Is the task force enough? Of course not," said Derek Hodel, treatment issues director for the AIDS Action Council. "This is one step, but it's an important step."

AIDS is the No. 1 killer of American men aged 25 to 44 and the eighth-biggest killer overall.

The federal Centers for Disease Control and Prevention estimate more than 1 million Americans are infected by HIV. Some 339,250 Americans have gotten AIDS, and 204,390 had died as of Sept. 30. The virus is usually spread through contact with blood or with semen from infected people.

Lambda Chi makes volleyball playoff berth in fraternity-division

WESS HUDELSON
Collegian

Lambda Chi Alpha landed a spot in the fraternity-division playoffs with its victory against Sigma Nu Tuesday night at the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex.

The Lambda Chis put together back-to-back 15-7 victories to finish off the Sigma Nus in the best two-out-of-three match.

"I don't think our minds were into it early enough," David Denning, Sigma Nu freshman in pre-law, said.

Sigma Nu scored first in game one on a Lambda Chi error. The teams then exchanged four kills without scoring.

Two errors by Sigma Nu made the score 2-1 in favor of Lambda Chi.

Troy Thornton, Lambda Chi sophomore in physical sciences, served as the Lambda Chis reeled off nine unanswered points, due to Sigma Nu errors, to make the score 11-1.

"They went on a few runs that put us into a tailspin that we couldn't really get out of," Denning said.

Sigma Nu pieced together six more points in the first game, but the lead was too much to overcome, and Lambda Chi ran away with the first game 15-7.

"We haven't made the playoffs since anyone here can remember, and we were all pretty psyched up for this game," said Greg Newham, Lambda Chi junior in milling science and management.

Errors again plagued Sigma Nu in the second game as Lambda Chi jumped out to a 2-0 lead.

Sigma Nu blocked a spike to end the rally and then blocked another to make the score 2-1.

Sigma Nu then hit four balls out of bounds to give Lambda Chi a 6-1 lead. Sigma Nu answered with two points off of Lambda Chi errors before allowing Lambda Chi four more unearned points to make the score 10-4.

One final surge was made when Sigma Nu scored three points on two kills and a Lambda Chi error to make the score 10-7.

Lambda Chi made the score 14-7 on one kill and three more Sigma Nu errors.

The final serve by Jeff Strahm, Lambda Chi junior in pre-professional secondary education, put the match away 15-7, 15-7.

"We've been coming out to the Rec every night playing pick-up games to get ready for this," Newham said. "I think we'll go out and celebrate now."

FOOTBALL

Pack for Tucson; Cats in Copper

JEFFERY CRABTREE
Collegian

The K-State football team accepted a bid Tuesday to play against Wyoming in the Weiser Lock Copper Bowl.

The announcement came at a press conference after the Bowl Coalition released both K-State and Colorado from possibly playing in one of the Coalition bowls.

Coach Bill Snyder said the bid was an honor, but he said he was disappointed that the Aloha Bowl overlooked the Cats.

"This truly is a honor for K-State," Snyder said. "There was speculation that we wanted to go to the Aloha Bowl, but our team's goal has always been to receive the recognition that went with the highest finish we could earn in the Big Eight Conference. I never seriously thought that the Aloha Bowl considered us."

Snyder then said he was never against going to the Copper Bowl.

"If the Copper Bowl had been designed for the third-place team, we would have desired that bowl from the beginning," Snyder said. "I'm disappointed with the selection process, but that still doesn't take away from our accomplishment. If the players can't get up for the game, I'll leave them here in Manhattan."

The bowl game, which is to be played on Dec. 29, will be only the second bowl game for K-State in 98 years. The Cats last played in a bowl in 1982, when they lost to Wisconsin 14-3 in the Independence Bowl.

Snyder said the game against Wyoming could be a springboard for the program.

"This game could take us to the next level," Snyder said. "It would give us an opportunity to get better in the future."

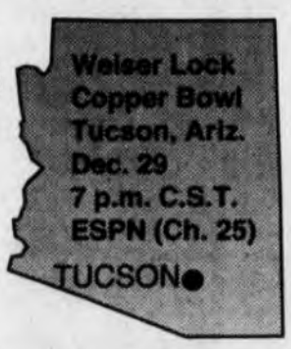
An advantage the Copper Bowl has over the Aloha Bowl is that more than 10,000 K-State fans are expected to attend the game. Snyder said that would help the team.

"All of the bowls are concerned about the way a school will travel to their bowl," Snyder said. "K-State will travel very well to Tucson, and this will help us later on down the road when other bowls are considering us.

"The fans, players' families and band members, who wouldn't have been able to make the trip to Hawaii, will get the opportunity to go to Arizona."

The Cats' opponent will be Wyoming, which finished with an 8-3 record. The Cowboys also earned a share of the Western Athletic Conference title with a 6-2 league record.

"This could probably be one of the best match-ups," Snyder said. "Wyoming is an excellent program, and they have established a little bit of tradition by going to some bowls in the past. They also have people in the program that have been to several bowls, and that's an advantage over us."



The Cowboys are led by all-America receiver Ryan Yarborough, who broke the all-time NCAA receiving yardage record this season with 4,357 yards. He has 42 career touchdowns, and he led the nation this year with 67 catches for 1,512 yards.

"It's going to be a challenge to go up against their passing game," K-State free safety Jaime Mendez said. "I'm already looking forward to it. I would rather play against a passing team."

BASKETBALL

Wildcats look for first win of season against the Aggies

BRIAN ANDERSON
Collegian

The K-State men's basketball team will try to avoid an 0-2 start when it takes on the 1-0 Texas A&M Aggies tonight.

If the Wildcats do lose, it would be just the second 0-2 start for K-State in 25 years.

And that is one statistic that K-State coach Dana Altman is trying to avoid.

But Altman said his team is having some problems, both offensively and defensively.

"We're really having a hard time with the timing of the offense," Altman said. "We aren't moving the ball quickly, and the offense needs to be crisper.

"Defensively, we played well for 16 to 17 minutes against Southern Mississippi," he said of Saturday's season-opening loss. "But once our intensity was lost, they were able to throw it inside and beat us."

K-State will have to do better near the basket on defense. The Aggies have forward Damon Johnson, who recorded 24 points and 14 rebounds in their 73-69 win against Bucknell last Saturday.

"Johnson is their big scorer," Altman said. "He looks to catch the ball often, and we need to keep someone fresh on him."

Altman said the Cats must defend the opponents' big men better.

"We weren't putting pressure on the man throwing the ball (against Southern Mississippi), but we've got to do much better defending the post players," he said.

Another area of concern is Aggie guard David Edwards. Edwards, who ranks third among current college players with 493 career assists and fifth in steals with 193, will go against guard Anthony Beane.

Altman said Beane is not playing as consistently as he did last year.

"It is not that he is playing poorly — he just isn't initiating the offense," Altman said. "Anthony is making tougher plays, is handling the ball more and has a more pressure on him this year than last year."

Altman said senior Askia Jones, who is recovering from knee surgery, has been working with the team as recently as Monday.

"He worked out and did some drills," Altman said. "He is not ready to start yet. The doctors have pretty much released him. It's his call when he wants to return."

Tradition of making money maintains current bowl system

TROY COVERDALE

Oh, that wacky bowl coalition!

Last year, in direct opposition to what the coalition was supposed to do, the Cotton Bowl asked Notre Dame to play Texas A&M, when the Irish, as the No. 4 team in the country, should have played the No. 3 team at the time.

This year, the John Hancock Bowl has selected the fourth-place team in the Big Eight — Oklahoma — to play in its bowl game because the hometown fans in El Paso, Texas, are more apt to buy tickets to see the big bad, but still fourth-place, Sooners instead of watching the second-place team, Colorado.

And then, to top it all off, the coalition claims it is putting forth a true national championship game between undefeated Nebraska and Florida State, which has lost a game, while West Virginia, the only other unbeaten eligible, gets the shaft.

I'm laughing so hard, I think my sides will split.

Now remember, this circle of comedic errors was all precipitated by the formation of the "good ol' boy network" that is called the bowl coalition, an arrangement between a group of nine bowls, with the Orange, Sugar, Cotton and Fiesta ranking as the top of the group.

The purpose was to fend off the public demand for a national championship game in college football by trying to pit the top two teams in the polls against each other in a so-called championship game.

And then the coalition set up an arrangement so complex that it takes a book about the same size as the textbook for Principles of Biology to understand all the implications and agreements.

But none of this should be a real surprise when one considers the original purpose of the bowl games — to make money.

Some people argue that the best reason to keep the bowl system instead of a national college football playoff is because it is "tradition."

Sure it is. It's a tradition of making the almighty athletic dollar, while the men in charge (and for the most part, it remains very much men in charge), light up their stogies and kick back dreaming of the kickback they will receive from the blind sheep that watch their game — no matter who is playing.

That's why the names of the bowl games have evolved into the "Weiser Lock Copper Bowl," the "Federal Express Orange Bowl," and my personal favorite, the "Carquest Auto Parts Bowl."

A true national college championship, organized and run by the National Collegiate Athletic Association, would put an end to this seemingly endless fountain of greenbacks.

It would put the NCAA in direct charge over the post-season, and in turn, the money.

It would mean more money from the NCAA to schools and conferences to support women's athletics and underfunded programs.

And it would mean the money-paying public would be getting what it wants — a college football playoff.

But the bowl games as we know them would no longer exist.

Boo hoo.

I do have to hand it to members of West Virginia's athletic department. They're trying to beat the bowl coalition at its own game.

The Mountaineers are considering turning down a $3-million payday to play against Texas A&M in the Cotton Bowl to instead play against Florida or Alabama in the Sugar Bowl for $4.1 million.

In other words, West Virginia is playing the political game with the bowl coalition after the politics of the coalition cost them a well-deserved chance at the national title.

That should cause some frowns of concern within the "good ol' boy network" of the bowl coalition.

Racism crosses toxic lines

Dump sites near minority, poor neighborhoods

DANI JOHNSTON
Collegian

Environmental racism is a system of power being assigned by skin color.

This issue was addressed by Nedra Bonds, an environmental and social-justice activist, Tuesday evening in the K-State Union.

"Environmental racism has to do with the power and the way the country is organized in terms of control," Bonds said. "There are a handful of white folks who are in control of things, and they have money and power."

"A small minority of people control a wide vast of people," she said. "One-tenth of 1 percent actually have all the power and control of all the resources, and they are the super-rich white people. They have institutionalized, over a period of time, a model to maintain control — the power model."

Bonds spoke as part of Earth Awareness Week, and the lecture was sponsored by Students Acting to Save a Vulnerable Environment (SAVE).

Paul Davidson, senior in geography and liaison coordinator for SAVE, said Bonds is the first speaker this year.

Bonds gave a history of environmental racism starting with World War II, when the formula for power was money.

"The original meaning of the conservation movement was to provide outdoor space for white people to play," she said,

"The problem has to do with the business model, that it does not matter what you do as long as you make money," Bonds said.

Multi-national corporations, which started after WWII, gained control of people and began to pollute more outside of the country, she said.

"There is a pattern here that has been institutionalized, and it is the colored people and the poor people who are sited near waste landfills," Bonds said. "Toxic-waste dumps are placed near areas where colored and poor people live. For example, there are 69 toxic-waste dump sites in Wyandotte County, Kansas, where colored and poor people live."

Bonds said toxic waste from the ground was found in Garland Park in Kansas City, and it took a long time before the Environmental Prot-ection Agency exa-mined the problem.

Another example she used was of houses across from a chromium-replating business in Kansas City that were tested for lead poisoning because the residents became sick.

Bonds said the chromium had been around so long that any lead poisoning would not show up in blood tests, so bone-marrow tests had to be done.

"This is environmental racism — these things happen to people when they don't care enough to take care of the problem," Bonds said.

President signs Brady bill after lengthy legislative battle

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Declaring that it was step one in taking our streets back, President Clinton today signed into law the long-fought Brady handgun control bill.

DETAILS OF LAW
The new handgun control bill will take effect in 90 days. It will require:
- a five-day waiting period
- a background check on buyers

The law requires a five-day waiting period and background check on handgun buyers and will take effect in 90 days.

"America won this battle," Clinton told 200 people in the East Room of the White House. "Americans are finally fed up with violence that cuts down another citizen with gunfire every 20 minutes. We know that this bill will make a difference."

Clinton emotionally recounted an incident in Arkansas where a friend of his sold a gun to a man just released from a mental institution. The man then shot and killed six people.

"Don't tell me this bill won't make a difference," he said. "It is not true."

The bill's namesake, former White House Press Secretary James Brady, said the bill would bring the end of unchecked madness and the commencement of a heartfelt crusade for a safer and a saner country.

Severely wounded in the 1981 assassination attempt on President Reagan, Brady and his wife, Sarah, have promoted gun control since the mid-1980s.

"Twelve years ago, my life was changed forever by a disturbed young man with a gun," Brady said. "Until that time, I had not thought about gun control or the need for gun control. Maybe if I had done so, I wouldn't be stuck with these damn wheels."

Brady has used a wheelchair since the shooting.

Clinton insisted the Brady bill and other gun-control laws will not hurt hunters.

"We have taken this important part of life of millions of Americans and turned it into an instrument of maintaining madness. It is crazy," Clinton said.

"Would I let anybody change that life of America? Not on your life," he said.

Attorney General Janet Reno called the Bradys an example for all Americans that they can make a difference — that one person, that one family can make a difference in violence in America.

Reno noted that Sarah Brady vowed not to stop with the Brady bill alone, saying after the Senate approved it last week, "We're going to get the ban on assault weapons passed."

Kappa Delta closes its doors

CRYSTAL GOERING
Collegian

Kappa Delta sorority will be closing its doors Dec. 18 and will not reopen until further notice.

Members of the sorority have decided that closing the house would be better for Kappa Delta in the long run, Lorna Haahr, sophomore in civil engineering and Kappa Delta Panhellenic representative, said.

Barb Robel, greek affairs adviser, said Panhellenic Council will assist Kappa Delta in recolonizing when its national chapter decides the time is right.

"Normally, we feel we should wait one college generation, which is four or five years, before opening," she said.

The building is owned by the Kappa Delta sorority, so it cannot be rented out, Haahr said. The members will close the house, and their alumni adviser will check on it regularly.

Members have tried to stay together in their living arrangements for the spring semester; most will be living in apartments and houses off campus, Haahr said.

Robel said she was informed of the closing by the national Kappa Delta organization, and when the time comes, Panhellenic Council will be involved in its decision to reopen.

"I think they probably made a good decision, given the circumstances, which are low numbers," she said.

When the K-State chapter of Kappa Delta is reopened, nationals will perform the rushing, LaTricia McCune, co-president and senior in pre-medicine and life science, said.

"They will organize a rush team and use the best rushers from all across the U.S.," she said. "It's best for national Kappa Delta because they're very strong and will come back without any problems."

Haahr said she is positive about the reopening.

"I think people can come back 30 years in the future, and we will still be here, and we will still be strong."

Violence flares in Northern Ireland

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LONDON — The government says it will keep open its newly disclosed channels of communication with the Irish Republican Army, but another killing in Northern Ireland today underlined the difficulties ahead.

The outlawed Ulster Defense Association, based in the Protestant majority in Northern Ireland, claimed responsibility for killing a 47-year-old Roman Catholic worker, Sean Hagan, at a factory on the outskirts of Belfast. He was shot just after midnight, after finishing his shift, police said.

Workers at the factory, mostly Protestants, stayed away to show respect and to protest the shooting.

This year, the Ulster Defense Association and other "loyalists" have killed 44 people. The IRA has killed 32.

"We are now in a position where we are very likely — in trying to make a deal with one side — to provoke the other to increase violence," Lord Tebbit, a Cabinet minister under Margaret Thatcher, told BBC radio.

Tebbit and his wife were among those injured in the IRA hotel bombing in Brighton, England, in 1984 that was intended to kill the prime minister. Lady Tebbit was paralyzed.

In Armagh in central Northern Ireland, the IRA was suspected of firing shots and setting off a bomb late Monday at the home of a member of the security forces. The man's wife and children were at home, but no one was injured, police said.

The next order of business for Prime Minister John Major is setting a date for a summit with Irish Prime Minister Albert Reynolds.

The summit had been set for Friday, but the date is now in doubt, apparently because of difficulties in drafting a joint statement on Northern Ireland.

The two governments, which established a formal framework for consultations on Northern Ireland in 1985, have been working closely this year. Both have said they oppose any change in Northern Ireland's status as part of the United Kingdom without the agreement of a majority of people there.

"We are now in a position where we are likely — in trying to make a deal with one side — to provoke the other to increase violence."

LORD TEBBIT
CABINET MINISTER

Both have also called for the IRA to lay down its arms.

Despite the promises, fears have been rising among Protestants in Northern Ireland that a British deal with the IRA could eventually end the province's union with Britain and make them a minority in a reunited Ireland dominated by Catholics.

The recent talk of peace has boosted both governments. Major and his Northern Ireland secretary, Sir Patrick Mayhew, drew strong support Monday in the House of Commons for the secret contacts with the IRA.

Reynolds' popularity has risen along with the tide of peace talk. A poll of 1,000 adults published in the Irish Times on Monday showed 42 percent were satisfied with the government, the highest rating in 18 months.

Reynolds' personal approval rating was 55 percent, highest in more than a year.

In the documents of IRA contacts released Monday by Mayhew, Britain said exploratory talks with Sinn Fein — the political party that supports the IRA — could begin within 10 weeks of the IRA calling a cease-fire.

Protestant unionist politicians in Northern Ireland have talked about waiting as long as five years between a cease-fire and negotiations. Hardliners say they will never deal with Sinn Fein.

William Ross, an Ulster Unionist lawmaker from Northern Ireland, said today that it was futile for Britain to seek a deal with the IRA.

"Irish Republicans cannot be bought off. Their bottom line is a United Ireland. Our bottom line is a United Kingdom," Ross said.

Bosnian peace talks make no progress

ASSOCIATED PRESS

ROME — The Clinton administration today stepped up U.S. aid to civilians in Bosnia, pledging an additional $150 million to provide winter relief through more food and medical aid.

The new assistance was announced by Secretary of State Warren Christopher, who said the United States was prepared to double the number of flights into Sarajevo, the capital of the former Yugoslav republic where ethnic conflict over 19 months has forced tens of thousands of civilians from their homes.

He also said airlifts would be sent to Tuzla, northeast of the capital, where the airport has been closed.

Christopher called on warring parties to stop their unconscionable conduct that blocks the delivery of supplies there.

"Full access will serve the vital needs of all of Bosnia's factions," he said.

The United States already provides $400 million in assistance, making it the largest contributor in the world.

Christopher spoke to a 53-nation Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe designed to deal with conflicts such as the one that has torn apart Bosnia-Herzegovina.

The Clinton administration earlier in the year proposed a show of NATO force against the Serbs to rescue the Muslims, the main victims in the fighting.

But the allies refused to permit weapons shipments to the Muslim-led government or to bomb Serb artillery sites, and the proposal was shelved.

Christopher said winter has come earlier to Bosnia, deepening the humanitarian crisis. He called the situation tragic and said the United States will increase its humanitarian efforts to help alleviate the suffering.

He said the new aid would be targeted to programs and organizations that provide the most critical aspects of winter relief.

Earlier Christopher had indicated the United States was determined to stall a European proposal to ease sanctions against Bosnia if Serbs agree to return captured lands to Muslims.

In a statement issued through representative Michael McCurry he said, "There can be no movement toward moderating sanctions until a Bosnia settlement has been reached, and the international community sees that it is being implemented."

But the statement also said the Clinton administration would reserve final judgment on sanctions until they see whether some conduct on the ground warrants movement on sanctions.

The disagreement over sanctions may be academic because Bosnian Serb leaders have given no indication publicly they would accept the European overture.

Christopher's next stop is Brussels, Belgium, where he will meet on Wednesday with ministers of the European Community and on Thursday with NATO ministers. Bosnia will head the agenda along with peacekeeping measures, including wider use of Russian troops in Georgia and other former Soviet republics.

Dear Cassandra,

Some of my friends have been bragging recently about the length of their "manhood," giving figures of anywhere between 8-1/2 to 10 inches.

Since I have heard somewhere that the national average is only six inches, I believe they must be either lying or else bound for porn stardom.

Please help us settle the long and short of this matter. What is the correct and accurate way to measure one's manhood?

Signed,
Rod

Dear Rod,

Cassandra knows these boys are lying, but she's just not sure why.

You're right, though. Common length is between 5-1/2 to seven inches so that puts the average at about six, eh? I would assume the correct and accurate way to measure — if there is such a thing — is when one is fully erect.

But the point I'd like to make here is that when it gets down to the long and the short of the matter — that's just it — it doesn't matter.

I'm consistent with my refusal to view people as objects strictly for the intent of sexual pleasure. And further, these expectations for our partners to be "bigger" or "longer" or whatever are not reality-based or fair.

Just as men should not judge women on the size of their breasts, women should not judge men on the size (or shape) of their penises.

As for these "friends" who've been bragging ... I'd suggest finding a new, more intelligent, less-shallow group of folks to hang out with.

They seem, at best, childish and personally very insecure and, at worst, absolutely incapable of intelligent thought or emotional depth.

I think you've found some of the little boys I always talk about.

Artist from Manhattan finds inspiration from Korean art

TERRY SCRUTON
Collegian

Hometown boy makes good.

It may sound like a cliché, but it is probably the best way to describe the life of artist Christopher Lucas, whose work is on display in the Union Art Gallery until Dec. 18.

"He's a really interesting artist," Gary Woodward, director of the art department, said.

Born in 1958 in Durham, N.C., Lucas moved to Manhattan at an early age when his father, Michael, got a teaching job at K-State.

Lucas attended K-State in 1977 for about three semesters. In 1979, he attended the Yale Summer School of Music and Art before returning to Kansas to earn his bachelor's degree from the University of Kansas.

After graduating, he spent some time teaching kindergarten in Lawrence. One day, he just decided to up and move to New York City.

It was then that his career began to take off.

Since his first exhibit in 1983 at the Anderson Theatre Gallery in New York, Lucas said he has had countless group and solo exhibits. He has also won three major awards for his work.

In 1987, he won a National Endowment of the Arts Fellowship. In 1988, he won an award from the Pollock-Krasner Foundation, and in 1990, he won a Fulbright Fellowship with which he chose to go to Korea.

"I chose Korea because I've always had an interest in Oriental religions and art," Lucas said. "Korean art has more soul. Japanese art is too cartoonish, and Chinese art is too structured."

Lucas said he was also interested in Korean Shamanism and wanted to incorporate that into his work.

"You go to a shaman to find a way out of a problem," he said. "I want my work to show people a way out of a problem. Shamans help give people balance."

Much of Lucas' work centers on the theme of balance. His exhibit for the Union is a series of drawings in which, he said, everything is reflected on itself.

Aside from drawings, many of his works are large sculptures made from wood, which he molds and laminates into various wave-like patterns. Lucas also does paintings on the molded wood using heraldic images such as butterflies and bats.

He said he learned woodworking at an early age from his father, helping him build sailboats. He later incorporated that skill into his work, an idea he said he would like to pass on to students.

"You should be learning as many different things as possible while you're in school," he said. "Don't just focus on one thing."

THEATER

'Beauty and the Beast' retells old classic

ANGELA YOUNG
Collegian

When people see "Beauty and the Beast" at 7:30 p.m. Friday in McCain Auditorium, they'll be seeing it in a different light.

American Family Theater, a touring company from Philadelphia, presents the classic tale as a musical.

However, the company's version stays true to the original story of a selfish prince who is turned into a beast and the beauty who looks beyond the monster to find the prince again.

"It tries so far as possible to stay relatively faithful to the original tale, which first appeared in print in 1740," Richard Martin, director of McCain Auditorium, said. "But whenever a tale is translated to another medium, it's never going to be the same as the published version."

Although "Beauty and the Beast" is a fairy tale, Martin said children aren't the only ones who may enjoy the show.

"I think a college student who is watching can recapture something they don't want to admit to having gone through — childhood," Martin said.

He said students interested in theater, literature and elementary education can especially benefit from the show.

"Students find a certain nostalgia from these types of shows," Martin said.

THEATER INFO
■ "Beauty and the Beast" will show at 7:30 p.m. Friday in McCain Auditorium.
■ Ticket prices are:
$6 for students and children
$10 for senior citizens
$12 for faculty and the general public

However, with a family-oriented show, Martin said he also expects Manhattan residents and their children to attend.

With the recent success of the Walt Disney version of "Beauty and Beast" still in video stores, Martin said patrons may react in two ways.

"Sometimes, movies can kill a live performance because people will think, I've already seen that," he said.

"But on the other hand, once they've seen it, people are curious about it and how the stage version will be done," he said.

Tickets for "Beauty and the Beast" are available at the McCain box office, the K-State Union, Bramlage Coliseum and Manhattan Town Center.

Ticket prices are $6 for students and children, $10 for senior citizens and $12 for faculty and the general public.

SPACE SHUTTLE

NASA schedules repairs

Trouble with Hubble telescope to cost $629 million

ASSOCIATED PRESS

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — Feel free to put in your 2 cents worth once spacewalking astronauts start trying to fix the Hubble Space Telescope.

That's what it costs each American citizen each week in taxes to operate and maintain the billion-dollar-plus observatory, which has bad eyesight, bad memory and a bad case of the jitters.

Space shuttle Endeavour was due to blast off before dawn Wednesday on the multimillion-dollar mission, considered the most complex shuttle flight and biggest repair job in space ever.

Bad weather threatened to delay the flight. Forecasters gave only a 30-percent chance of favorable conditions for the scheduled 3:57 a.m. launch.

The telescope's future lies in eight gloved hands — four spacewalkers who will go out in pairs to install corrective lenses, a new wide-field planetary camera, new solar panels, new gyroscopes, new computer and more.

A record five spacewalks are planned during the 11-day flight, and three more are possible if problems arise with either Hubble or the shuttle.

The tab for the mission is $629 million: $251 million for Hubble parts, ground operations and related activities and $378 million for the shuttle trip.

While just about everybody has criticized NASA for launching Hubble with an improperly ground mirror, few have complained about the basic premise of studying the universe above Earth's distorting atmosphere.

HUBBLE REPAIRS

- Astronauts will install corrective lenses, a new wide-field planetary, new solar panels, new gyroscopes and a new computer.
- The mission costs $629 million: $251 million for parts, etc. and $378 for the trip.

Nonetheless, some scientists have complained that ground observatories could do the job almost as well.

David Leckrone, Hubble's senior project scientist, said he doesn't think American taxpayers have gotten their money's worth out of Hubble — yet.

The telescope has been in orbit 3-1/2 years and has 11-1/2 years of work remaining.

However, once Hubble's vision is restored, and the telescope can peer back 14 billion light years with clarity instead of 4 billion light years, Americans will be getting a bargain for the money invested, Leckrone said.

Here's how Leckrone and other NASA officials boil down Hubble costs:

The cost of operating and maintaining the Hubble telescope since its 1990 launch is about $250 million a year.

Figure 250 million Americans, and that comes out to $1 per American per year or about 2 cents a week.

The telescope, including development and initial operations, cost about $2 billion at the time of launch. That expense was spread over a little more than 10 years. In simple terms, that's about $200 million a year.

Figure about 200 million Americans back then (even though there actually were several million more), and that comes out, again, to $1 per American per year or 2 cents a week.

Hubble program scientist Edward Weiler looks at it as being out a couple cans of soda a year.

"To use a military analogy, Hubble's development cost is about the cost of one B-2 bomber. It's far less than one aircraft carrier," Weiler said.

Weiler acknowledges there are sure to be some Americans who don't want to spend even 2 cents a week on Hubble. For the record, he said he welcomes their 2 cents worth.

Silver Meteor strikes tractor-trailer

ASSOCIATED PRESS

INTERCESSION CITY, Fla. — An Amtrak passenger train slammed into a tractor-trailer stalled at a railroad crossing and derailed today, injuring at least 45 people.

The driver of the rig could not be found, authorities said.

"We don't know if he's dead or if he jumped from the truck," said Mike Mahoney, an Osceola County fire-rescue dispatcher.

He said at least 45 people were hurt, but the total could be almost double that.

The eight-car Silver Meteor, bound for New York City from Tampa, was carrying 103 passengers and about eight crew members when the accident occurred in early afternoon, said Sue Martin, an Amtrak representative in Washington, D.C.

Four of the train cars were thrown off the tracks in the accident, she said.

The derailment occurred near Intercession City, 20 miles southwest of Orlando.

A green truck, apparently with a large generator on board, was tangled in the train's wreckage.

The train consisted of one engine, one mail car, one baggage car and six passenger cars, including a sleeping car, a lounge car and four coaches, Amtrak said.

It was the second derailment of an Amtrak train in a little more than a week. On Nov. 23, 16 people were injured, none seriously, when a Seattle-to-Chicago train derailed near Boise, Idaho.

U.S. offers $150 million aid to Bosnian civilians

ASSOCIATED PRESS

ROME — The Clinton administration today stepped up U.S. aid to civilians in Bosnia, pledging an additional $150 million to provide winter relief through more food and medical aid.

The new assistance was announced by Secretary of State Warren Christopher, who said the United States was prepared to double the number of flights into Sarajevo, the capital of the former Yugoslav republic where ethnic conflict over 19 months has forced tens of thousands of civilians from their homes.

He also said airlifts would be sent to Tuzla, northeast of the capital, where the airport has been closed.

Christopher called on warring parties to stop their unconscionable conduct that blocks the delivery of supplies there.

"Full access will serve the vital needs of all of Bosnia's factions," he said.

The United States already provides $400 million in assistance, making it the largest contributor in the world.

The Rec Report

Your Fitness Connection

Recreational Services, Kansas State University, Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex

Watch for our full page ad on the 1st day of each month for program information and monthly calendar of Recreational Services Events!

Working it Out

Wildcat Workout

Wildcat Workouts invites you to "CELEBRATE THE SEASON" working out to holiday tunes with jingle bells on your shoes! Afternoon sessions will be combined at 4:20 p.m. for this annual festive event Friday, December 10.

Pool Action

Additional instructors and training will revitalize your workout. New and energetic ideas come to Wildcat Workout in December. Splash your way to fitness Mondays, Tuesdays and Thursdays at 11:30 a.m., 7:30 p.m. and 8:30 p.m.

NEW CYBEX MACHINES ARE HERE!!!

Out with the old and in with the new. The weight room has received a face lift. Sixteen new pieces of Cybex weight lifting equipment has arrived. The Cybex equipment replaces the Universal equipment which was sold to the KSU-Salina campus. There is at least one new Cybex machine for every Universal machine taken out. We made sure to get the same types of machines that cover the same muscle groups. You will notice the machines are set up in areas that work the same muscle groups. The new machines give the weight room a more spacious and brighter appearance. Each machine comes with operational directions. If you need assistance, feel free to set up an appointment with Cory Long, our fitness consultant.

Mark Barnett and Sean Keogh work out on the new Cybex equipment.

WHAT TYPE OF MUSIC DO YOU WANT TO LISTEN TO?

Recreational Services will be conducting a survey to help determine what radio station/type of music you want to listen to while you exercise at the Rec. The survey will be conducted over a period of one week and before the start of finals. The survey will be administered at the Equipment Desk in the Rec Complex. Look for details at the Recreation Complex.

My Favorite Workout!

Robyn Stone, freshman in Pre-Vet studies, exercises at the Rec for a minimum of 9-10 hours per week. She incorporates free weights, machine weights, step aerobics, stairmaster and walking into her regular exercise routine.

"I work out to stay in shape because it makes me feel better about myself and it helps me to better handle stress."

Rec Check

Rec Check is a recorded information service to provide you with quick and easy information about Rec Services programs. The system saves the caller time by directing them to the information area. Use Rec Check to get information on the Rec Complex, Pools, Exercise Sessions, Intramurals, and Outdoor Equipment Rental. Call 532-6000

You Asked It!!

Q: I don't have a K-State parking permit, and I don't want to get a ticket, so when do I need to use the parking meters?

A: Parking is regulated at the Rec Complex from 7 a.m. to 4 p.m., Monday through Friday. In order to park at the Rec Complex without getting a ticket, you will need either a K-State parking permit or use the parking meters. In response to the expansion on the Rec Complex, we have installed additional parking meters by the Tennis Courts.

Cats collect post-season honors

JEREMY CRABTREE
Collegian

"With so many holes on the defensive side of the ball, and the quarterback situation still a question mark, the Wildcats will not be in minor bowl contention this season." — Football Action's prediction of the K-State football team before the start of the season.

A big part of the Wildcats' 8-2-1 record this season, which yielded the best record since 1932, had to do with the emergence of quarterback Chad May and first-team all-Big Eight Conference receiver Andre Coleman on offense.

May finished the season leading the Big Eight Conference in passing with 2,682 yards and only 10 interceptions. The transfer from Cal-State Fullerton also broke Lynn Dickey's single-season record for most passing yards in a season at K-State.

Coach Bill Snyder, who won his third Big Eight Coach of the Year title in five years, said May should have been picked to the first-team, all-Big Eight squad. May was selected as an honorable mention quarterback on the all-Big Eight team instead.

"No doubt we have great quarterbacks in the conference," Snyder said. "But as I said after the Oklahoma State game, no quarterback has done more for a team than Chad."

May broke a conference record for consecutive touchdown passes when he threw a touchdown pass in 10 straight games.

Coleman was the Cats' go-to man throughout the season. He finished second on the team in receiving, with 18.1 yards per reception. Coleman also had a 67-yard touchdown reception against Nevada-Las Vegas early in the season.

Against Oklahoma State, Coleman had 77 yards receiving, which moved him into third on K-State's all-time receiving list.

Coleman, Kevin Lockett and Mitch Running became the second receiving trio in Big Eight history to each catch 40 receptions in a season.

Coleman also excelled on special teams. He led the conference with a 28.9 average on kickoff returns, including a 72-yard return against Minnesota to help K-State score in the final minutes of that game. Coleman also averaged 13.4 on punt returns.

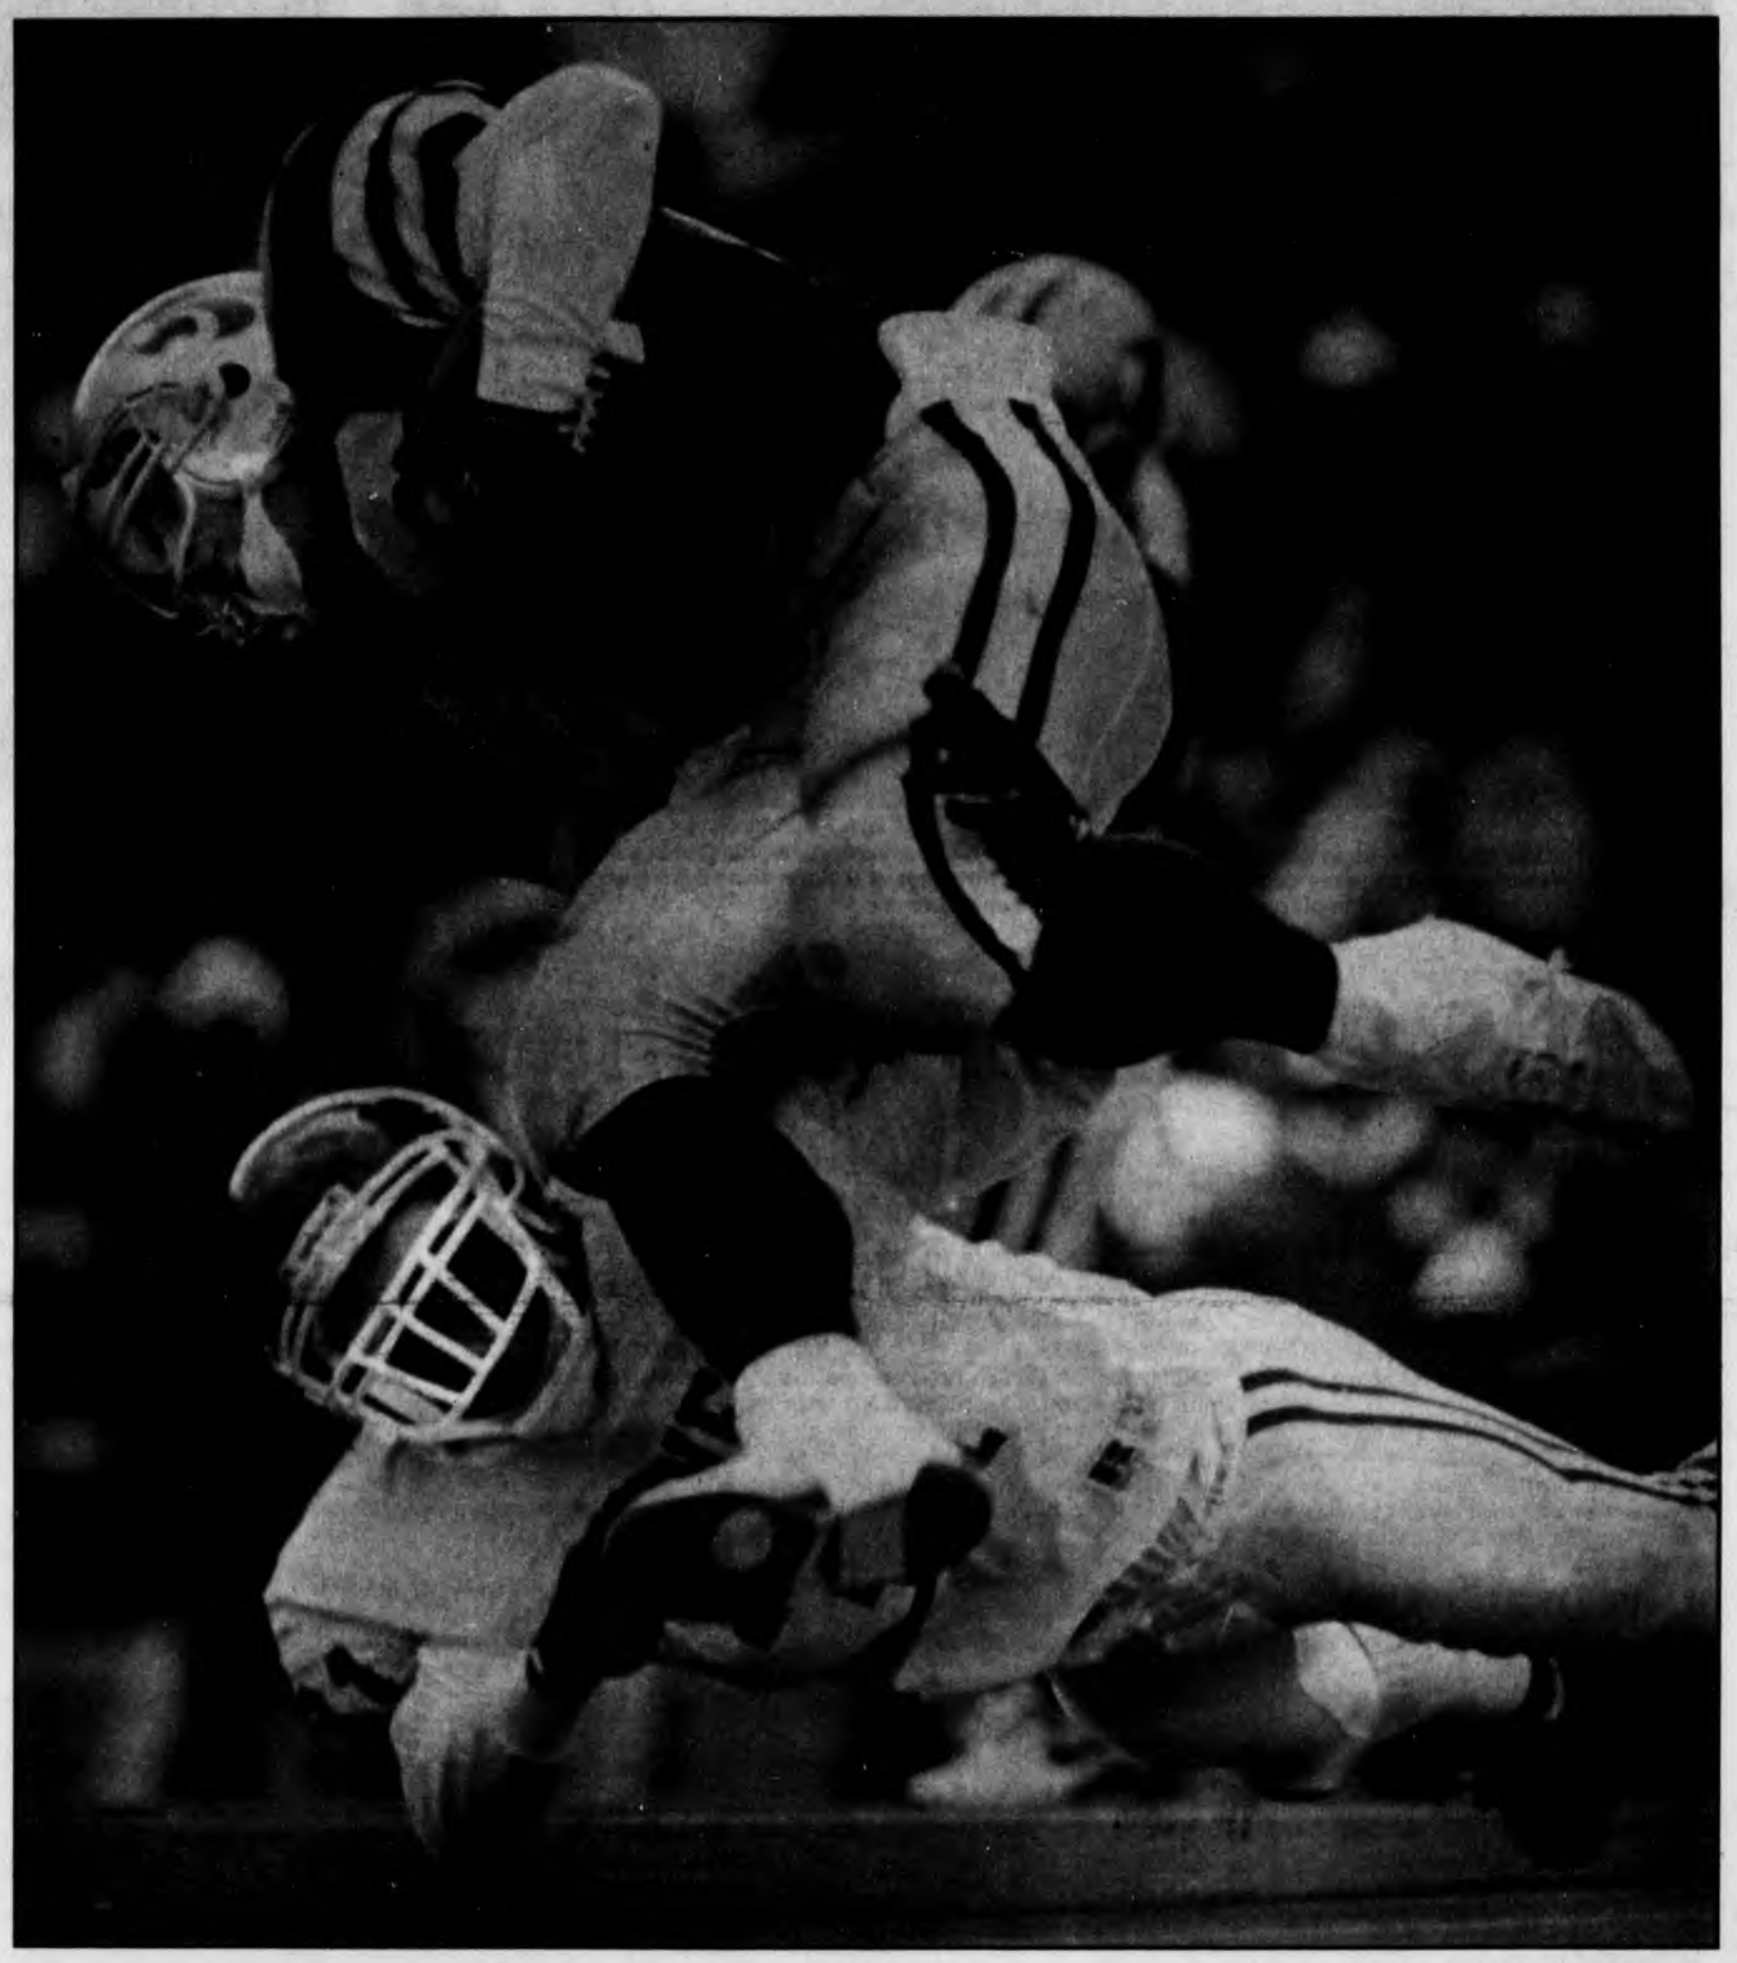
Along with Coleman on the first-team all-Big Eight squad was center Quentin Neujahr, who was an unanimous choice at his position.

Running backs J.J. Smith and Rod Schiller filled in for the departed Eric Gallon. Smith ran for 748 yards to rank fifth in the conference, while Schiller gained 505 yards on the ground.

The defense also played a big part in the Cats' resurgence. K-State's defense allowed only 343.6 yards per game to place fourth in the league, and they forced their opponents to punt 68 times.

The Cats' leading tackler was linebacker Kirby Hocutt, who finished with 133 total tackles, including 57 assisted stops.

Free safety Jaime Mendez was K-State's next leading tackler. Mendez had 127 tackles and 69 unassisted tackles. Mendez was also named to the Football News all-American team and to the Kodak all-American team.



The secondary for K-State put two players on the first-team, all-Big Eight defensive squad. Cornerback Thomas Randolph and Mendez made the squad, while cornerback Kenny McEntyre was named to the second-team, all-conference list.

K-State's post-season fate is yet to be decided, but the team will play in a post-season bowl game for only the second time in the school's history. The Cats could go to either the Jeep Eagle Aloha Bowl to be played Christmas Day in Honolulu, or the Weiser Lock Copper Bowl on Dec. 29 in Tucson, Ariz.

Snyder said the bowl game is an important step in building the program.

"It's an honor to play in either one," Snyder said. "Both are great bowls. I think it means a lot to go to a bowl. We might be able to get better recruits and get greater media attention."

With their third-place finish in the Big Eight, the Cats have the right to go to the Aloha Bowl, but the Copper Bowl has the Cats first on its wish list.

The Cat Tracker bus prepares to leave Stillwater, Okla. after the Wildcat victory over the Cowboys. The Cat Tracker made the required trip around Stillwater's equivalent of Aggieville carrying as many as many as 20 people. Pottroff cut off the rear of the bus and added a wooden deck for fans to enjoy a slow ride through towns The color of the bus was also changed from gray to purple to help reflect Wildcat spirit better.

Let's go and ride that magic Wildcat bus

No matter where a K-State team plays, the Cat Tracker is sure to be there.

Cat Tracker, a purple, remodeled school bus, was purchased by Bob and Kristi Pottroff of Manhattan to guarantee a way for their family and others to ride to a K-State ballgame.

"I vowed that I would never miss another game because of someone else's schedule," Bob said.

"Regardless of anyone's schedule, that bus is going to the game."

K-State football game days are an important way for the Pottroffs to relax and support the Cats after a busy work schedule, Kristi said.

"Our family time is basically the ballgames," Kristi said.

"Bob's mom and dad are faithful K-State fans."

The Cat Tracker originated when Matt Thorne, a K-State football player, mentioned one of his friends had an ugly, gutted-out gray bus that was for sale, Bob said.

Bob said he took a chance and bought the bus sight unseen.

Numerous Manhattan sponsors and the Pottroffs started to remodel the bus after they bought it in June in order to have it ready for the Purple Power Play on Poyntz.

Bob said the bus was so long when they first got it he knew he would have to shorten it.

So, the rear end was cut off, and the frame was left in order to build a deck, he said.

The three primary sponsors were Russ Briggs; Larry McBee, owner of the Energy Center Manhattan Pool; and the Manhattan Athletic Club, Bob said.

Bob said all remodeling was done first-class because there was not much risk involved in ruining the bus.

"I knew there was nothing I could do to screw it up," Bob said.

The bus has anywhere from $10,000 to $15,000 invested in it by sponsors and the Pottroffs.

Nearly half of money was invested by the Pottroffs, Bob said.

The bus takes about 16 people to each away football game and can hold as many as 20 people.

They park the Cat Tracker on the west parking lot, closest to the Dev Nelson Press Box, at all home football games, Kristi said.

Bob said for the Missouri game, they sent the Cat Tracker to Kansas City to pick up some businessmen who are fans of K-State and took them to the game.

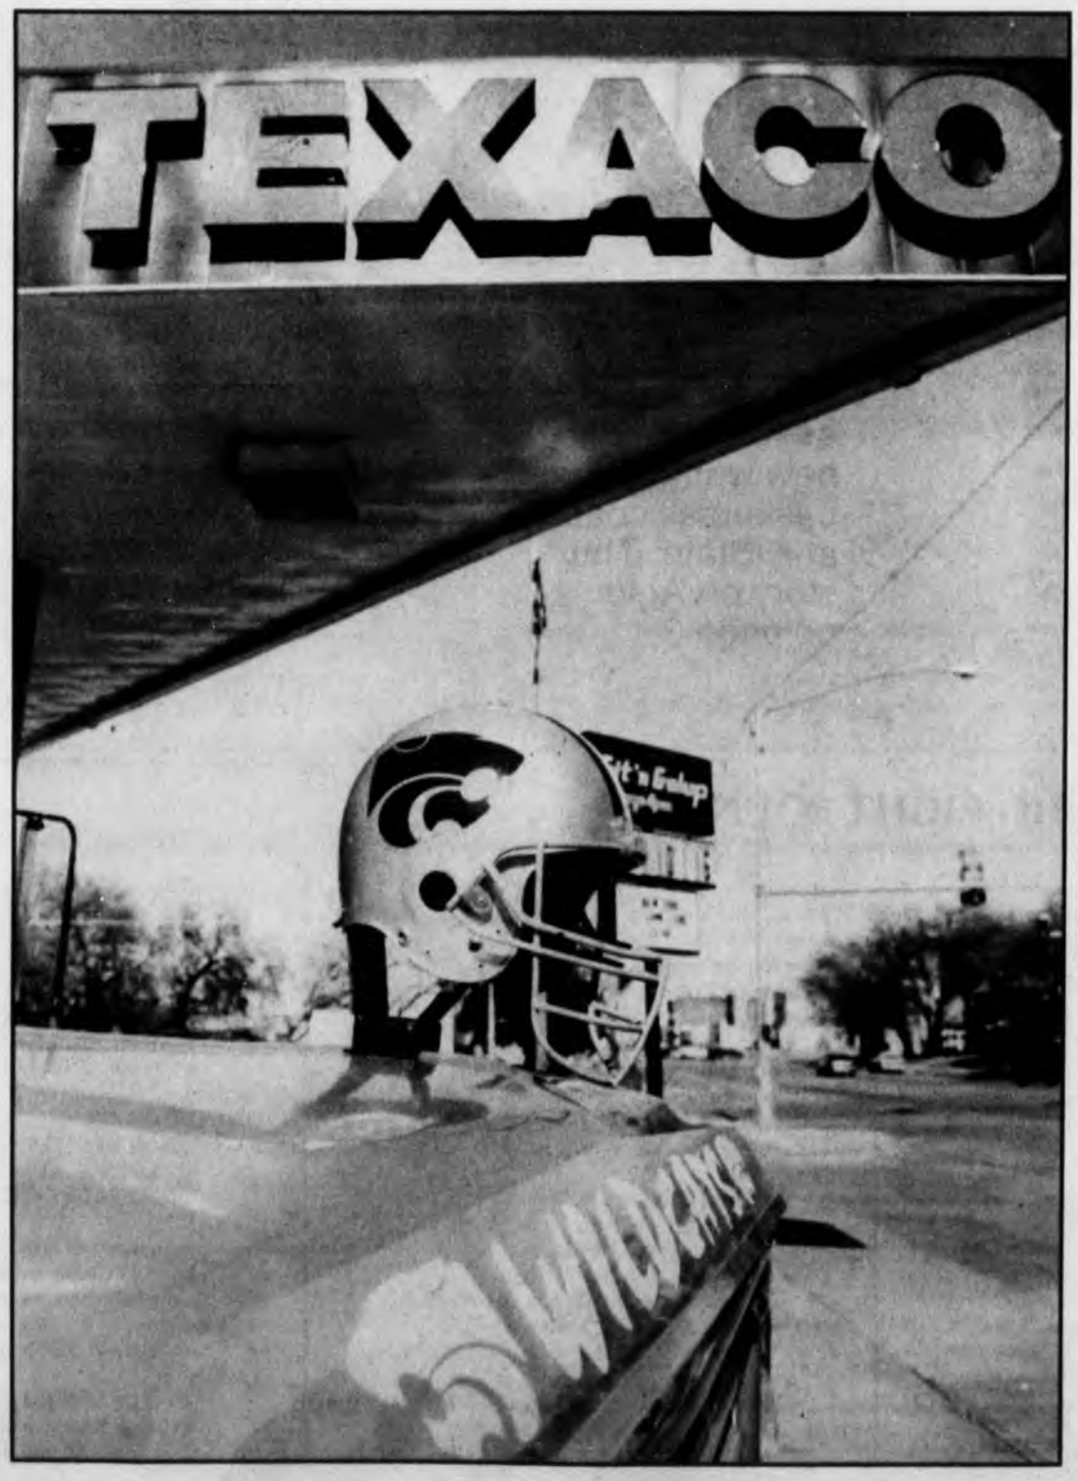
"We've used the bus several times to pick up people, although mostly local," Bob said.

The Cat Tracker was decorated with a Jayhawk splattered across the front of the bus and a sign that said 'Road Kill Cafe — today's special Hawk Dogs' at the Kansas football game in October, Bob said.

"We fed about 250 people what we called Hawk Dogs," Bob said.

Bob and Kristi said they hope the bus will still be around in 25 to 30 years. Each year the Pottroffs hope to add some sort of memorabilia to the bus from the football season.

"It's intended to be like a never-ending process. This year we're getting a signed ball from all the players," Bob said.



The cheerleaders and K-State athletic department are always welcome to use the Cat Tracker whenever they want to further promote K-State athletics, Bob said.

"The more we leave it on the road, the better it is for K-State," Bob said.

For the basketball season, Bob said he hopes to replace the football sign on the side of the bus with a basketball, but right now they are concentrating on ending the football season, he said.

Bob said a possibility is to have a contest for K-State students to win a trip on the Cat Tracker to the bowl game.

"All I can say is I hope we don't play in the Aloha Bowl in Hawaii," Bob said.

▶A Cats football helmet acts as the hood ornament for the bus. The Pottroffs hope to add new memorabilia each year. Many area merchants contributed materials and services for the bus. By next year, the Pottroffs hope to have a plaque acknowledging all those who helped and contributed to the Cat Tracker.

◀Larry McBee, a major sponsor of the Cat Tracker, gets ready for the football game by setting a K-State flag on the back of the bus during a pit stop in Stillwater. McBee did all of the carpentry work on the Cat Tracker. After arriving in Stillwater, loudspeakers were placed on the back to blare the Wildcat fight song and the Wabash Cannonball.

BIG EIGHT BASKETBALL

Oklahoma State predicted to win league over Kansas

K-State chosen seventh for the pre-season poll

BRIAN ANDERSON
Collegian

Oklahoma State was picked as the preseason favorite for this season's Big Eight race after a 20-9 record and an appearance in the Sweet 16 of the NCAA Tournament last year, while K-State is picked to fininsh seventh in the league.

Coach Eddie Sutton has four returning starters, including the conference preseason player of the year, Bryant Reeves.

Sutton said Reeves has gotten better since last season.

"He has improved more physically and has matured a lot mentally with the help of (North Carolina's Eric) Montross this summer," said Sutton of Reeves, who averaged 19.5 points and 10 rebounds a game last season.

Reeves said being on Team USA and playing against several European teams made him an improved player.

"I learned a lot this past summer," Reeves said. "I went against very good college athletes that made me work hard.

"By going against them, I learned how to use my body more and to move better in the paint."

Sutton will also have guards Randy Rutherford, who averaged 13.3 points per game, Brooks Thompson, who averaged 14.5 points and five assists per contest, and forward Fred Burley, who averaged 10.7 points.

Kansas is off to a 4-0 start, winning the preseason National Invitational Tournament last weekend. The Jayhawks are trying for their fourth-consecutive Big Eight regular-season crown.

Coach Roy Williams has to fill four starting positions, but he said the people, who would start, should do fine.

"Patrick Richey has done some nice things for us and might have to play at forward," Williams said. "We've got some fine guards in Calvin Rayford, freshman Jacque Vaughn and Steve Woodberry."

Greg Ostertag is expected to be the starting center, while forward Richard Scott is the only returning starter as he averaged 10.6 points and 5.3 rebounds a game last season.

PRE-SEASON STANDINGS

Pre-season points are given on an 8-7-6-5-4-3-2-1 basis.

| | Points |
|---|---|
| Oklahoma St. | 455 |
| Kansas | 401 |
| Missouri | 332 |
| Nebraska | 282 |
| Oklahoma | 240 |
| Iowa State | 196 |
| K-State | 180 |
| Colorado | 76 |

Missouri returns nine seniors this season after winning the Big Eight Tournament last year.

Coach Norm Stewart said he hopes winning the tournament catapults them into the season.

"We hope to play off a great Big Eight Tournament title," said Stewart, who begins his 27th year at Missouri.

"We intend to improve our conference standing finishing seventh (in the regular season)."

Melvin Booker and Jevon Crudup will return once they serve their suspension.

Booker scored 15.8 points per contest, while Crudup averaged 13.6 points and 8.3 rebounds a game last season.

Nebraska was picked for fourth in the preseason poll, but Coach Danny Nee said the season will be difficult without a definite big man.

"We won't be playing with a post player," Nee said. "We'll go with four forwards and one guard and have a 1-2-2 zone defense.

"Our lack of height and rebounding will be a problem for us."

The Cornhuskers will build around first-team, all-Big Eight forward Eric Piatkowski, who averaged 16.7 points and 5.7 rebounds a game.

He will be backed up by guard Jamar Johnson (9.8 points and 2.9 rebounds a game) and forward Bruce Chubick (8.4 points a game and 5.7 rebounds a game).

Oklahoma coach Billy Tubbs is looking for his 13th-straight 20-win season.

Tubbs said he thinks his team can accomplish that feat, even though he has added six newcomers to the program.

"We've got a long way to go, but we have a good chance to be a good team," Tubbs said. "I think we'll struggle early.

"With so many new faces, we'll be picking where people should go at the beginning of the season."

However, Tubbs is familiar with one player — Jeff Webster. As the only returning starter for the Sooners, Webster averaged 16.5 points and 5.8 rebounds per game and was selected to the preseason first-team, all-Big Eight for this year.

Iowa State returns eight players from last season's 20-11 team. Coach Johnny Orr said one player who has improved since the end of last season is Fred Hoiberg.

"Hoiberg has picked up his shooting over the summer," Orr said. "We look for (Julius) Michalik, (Loren) Meyer and Hoiberg to be our leaders this year."

Hoiberg averaged 11.6 points, 6.3 rebounds and was third in the conference in field-goal percentage at .550 percent.

After K-State in the preseason poll was Colorado, who enters the season as the youngest team in the Big Eight, bringing seven new players to its program.

"This is probably the youngest team I've ever coached." Coach Joe Harrington said. "We'e going to have to be patient with this group. We've got a lot of new players."

Guard Donnie Boyce was the Big Eight's second-highest scorer last year with 19.1 points per game.

He said making the decision to play at Colorado has left him feeling more comfortable after having thoughts of playing at Michigan.

"This summer was real hectic," Boyce said. "I did think about transferring, but I decided to come back. Now that I have, I've settled down a lot, and I am playing with more focus."

WOMEN'S BASKETBALL

Wildcats move to 2-0 after opening week

WESS HUDELSON
Collegian

The women's basketball team improved its record to 2-0 Monday night with a 73-45 victory over Missouri-Rolla at Bramlage Coliseum.

Junior Shawnda DeCamp picked up where she left off against Detroit Mercy last Saturday by hitting her first four shots.

However, when she finally cooled off midway through the first half, junior Shanele Stires stepped up and eventually led the Wildcats with 22 points on the night.

"I'm satisfied. I told you the offense wasn't centered around me," DeCamp said. "They had a chance to score, and that is good."

DeCamp tallied 21 points for the night, and senior Lynn Holzman added 12 points and seven rebounds to K-State's balanced attack.

"I was real happy to see Shanele shoot the way she did," Coach Brian Agler said.

Stires was nine for 11 from the field on Monday night, improving from two for eight attempts against Mercy.

"I've been passive on offense," Stires said. "I got better prepared mentally and forced the issue more tonight."

Despite the improvements, Agler said he was disappointed with the amount of turnovers committed by K-State.

K-State turned the ball over 21 times in Monday's contest and 17 times against Mercy.

"We're having hard time getting into our offense. We don't see open people. We play a lot with tunnel vision, and we can't be like that," Agler said.

Another point Agler emphasizes is defense. During his 10-year career at Missouri-Kansas City, his teams led the nation in defense — including an NCAA Division I record of 51.8 points per game in 1991.

"I'm sure we had stretches where we played pretty good defense, but we still have a long way to go," Agler said.

One of those stretches came at the end of the Missouri-Rolla contest when K-State did not allow the Miners a field goal for the last 10 minutes and 55 seconds of the game.

K-State held Mercy to 19 percent from the field in the first half but allowed the Titans to increase to 42 percent from the field and score 40 points in the second half.

"We are trying to develop a winning attitude, and that's done by developing mental toughness and confidence," Agler said.

K-State finishes its exhibition schedule against Athletes in Action at 1 p.m. Saturday in Bramlage.

Agler said Holzman and Stires mentally improved from the first game, but the rest of the team remained about the same.

"I could see tonight that Shanele, Lynn and Shawnda were starting to take control, but we need to have some other people step up," Agler said.

Holzman held Missouri-Rolla forward Joee Kvetensky to 10 points on the night. Kvetensky averaged 22.5 points in her first four games.

"The coaches were pleased with my defensive effort on Saturday night, but tonight I feel like I put more of a full game together," Holzman said.

MEN'S BASKETBALL

Eagles break Cats' streak

BRIAN ANDERSON
Collegian

The K-State men's basketball team did something no other Wildcat team had done in nearly a decade.

The Cats lost their first season opener since the 1983-84 season as they were downed by Southern Mississippi 74-60 last Saturday in Bramlage Coliseum.

The last season-opening loss occurred when the Cats were beaten in Chicago by Loyola, 71-62, and the loss was the first time that a non-conference opponent beat the K-State at home since Arkansas handled K-State 70-59 on Dec. 10, 1991.

K-State led 30-27 at halftime, but the Eagles went on an 8-2 run in the final two minutes of the half. Southern Mississippi came out of the locker room with an 11-2 run to take the lead for the rest of the game.

The Cats would not come back in the second half as K-State shot 28 percent (10 of 36 field goal attempts), while the Eagles hit 64 percent (18 of 28 attempts) from the field.

K-State coach Dana Altman said his team couldn't find a way to come back in the second half.

"We lost our composure in the second half," Altman said.

"I thought with the veterans we have that it wouldn't happen, but it seemed like the veterans were just as guilty as some of the new guys."

Southern Mississippi coach M.K. Turk said he thought his team caught the Cats off guard.

"We have a lot of respect for Kansas State and the ability they have to come back in a game," Turk said.

"We consider ourselves very fortunate to come in here and get a win."

Junior guard Demond Davis, who had 12 points and 13 rebounds, said he was surprised K-State couldn't do better.

"We started out strong, and the defense was pumped up," Davis said. "We let them score too many easy baskets. We got to play for 40 minutes. We can't play for 17 or 18 minutes.

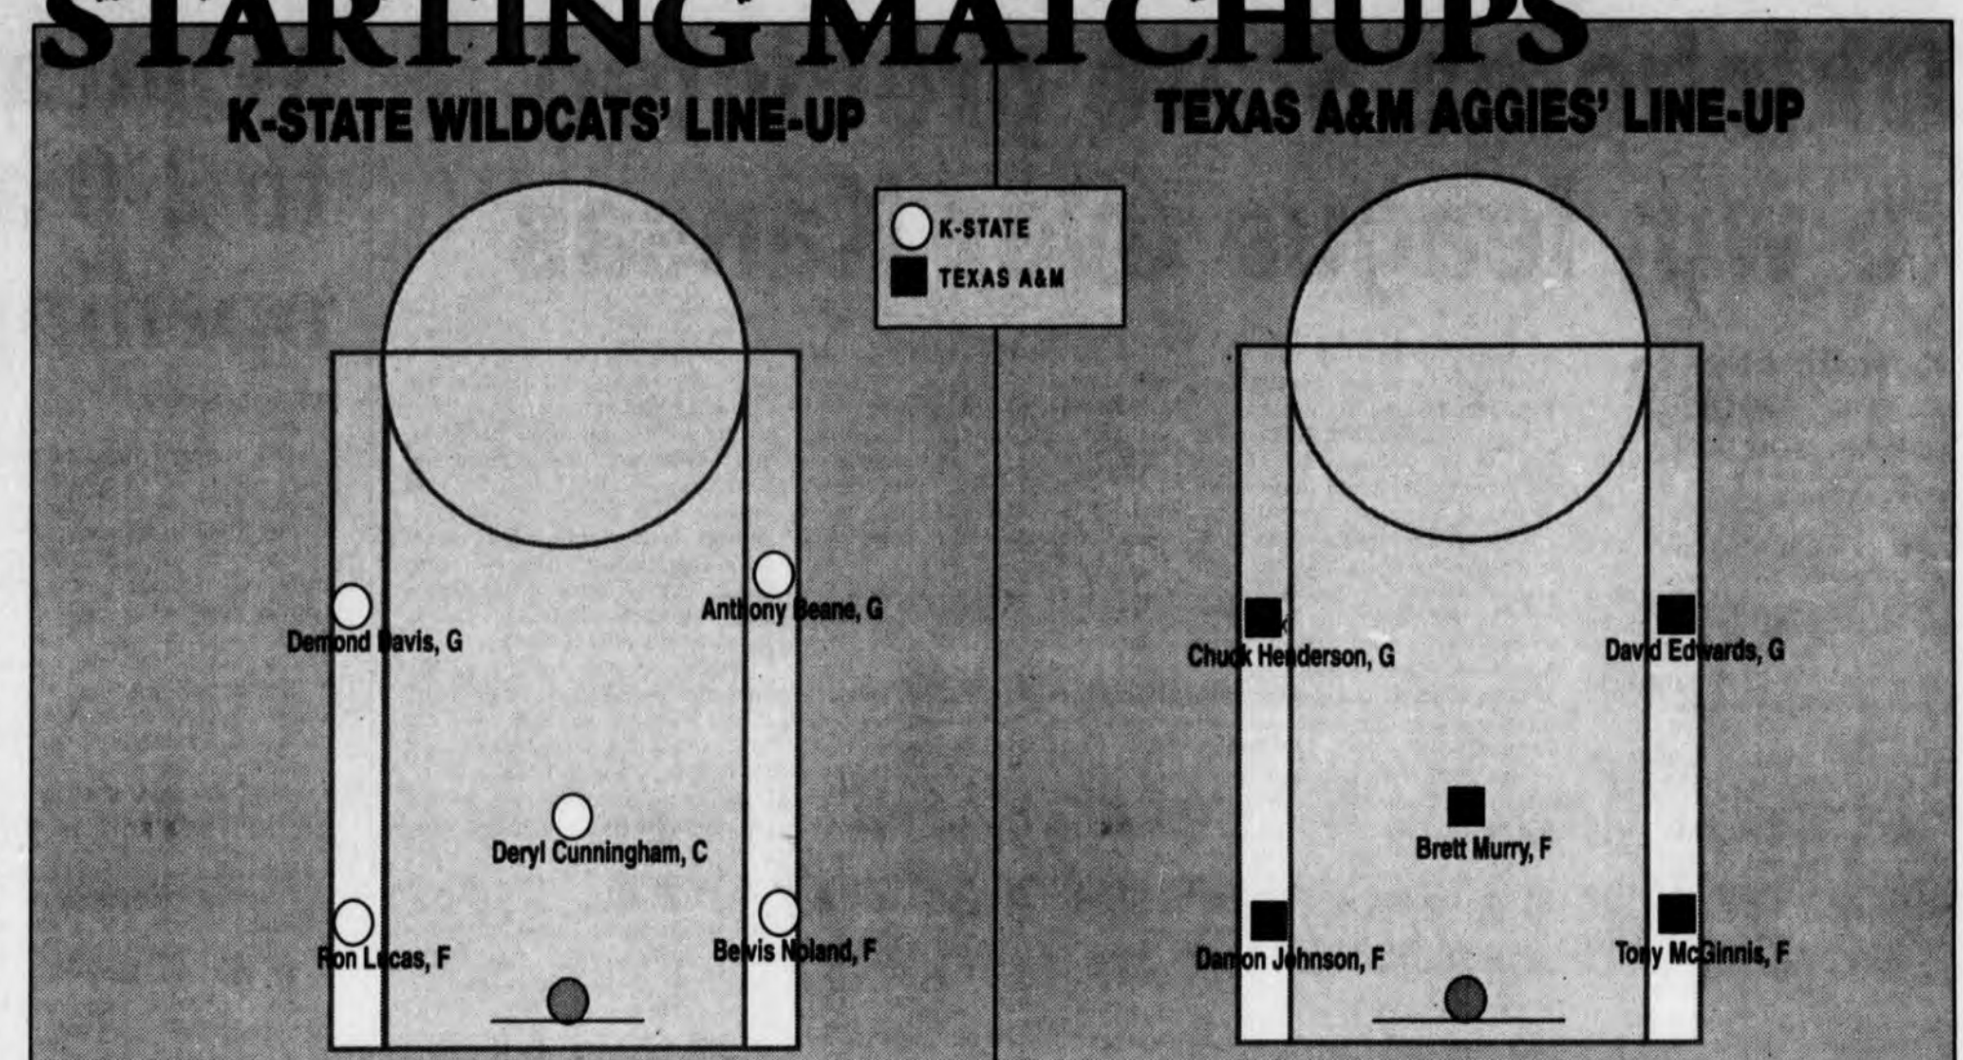
"I think everyone worked hard, but we need to work extra hard."

Coach Turk said K-State has will turn it around once Askia Jones returns to the lineup.

"I think K-State is an awfully good team that will win a lot of ballgames. They will get better as the season goes along. Of course, they played tonight without (Askia) Jones, which was a major factor."

Jones has been jogging for several days, but Altman said Jones will come back when he is ready to play.

Altman said he knows the Cats have to recover as soon as possible.



"We are going to have to show some resiliency," Altman said. "We're going to have to bounce back quickly. Texas A&M is a better ballclub than Southern Mississippi. Southern Mississippi is a solid team with four starters back — Texas A&M has all five starters back."

The Aggies went 10-17, 5-9 in the Southwestern Conference last season

The tip-off for tonight's game against the Texas A&M Aggies, who were 10-17, 5-9 in the Southwestern Conference, is 7:30 p.m. at Bramlage Coliseum.

Then, K-State will compete against Coppin State on Dec. 4 at 7:30 p.m. in the coliseum and the Long Island Blackbirds on Dec. 7 in Bramlage.

Streaker lets it all hang out

Masked Bandit takes nude jog through campus

JEREMY UNRUH
Collegian

At 10:26 a.m. Wednesday, a man identified only as the "Masked Bandit" took a leisurely jog through campus clad in nothing but sneakers and a mask.

"The stretch was the central sidewalk from between Cardwell and Waters halls all the way to the Union," said the Bandit's driver, who wished only to be identified as J.T.

"It was my idea," J.T. said. "I knew he would do it. I told him I would buy him a keg for a little nude run."

J.T. also said the Bandit uttered the words "here goes nothing" as he climbed out of the car behind Waters.

The Bandit described the incident:

"When I came out from between Waters and Cardwell, I didn't see hardly anyone. As I got nearer to Lafene (Health Center) I could see people standing there waiting. Some turned their heads, and others just stood there with their mouths open — in admiration, I guess," the Bandit said.

The Bandit said the drop-off was nearly as traumatic as the jog itself.

"First, we were late because we got stuck behind a long line of cars. Then a campus cop drove by as J.T. was picking me up," the Bandit said.

The "miracle mile" apparently has a history at K-State.

"I had a buddy that used to do it regularly back in the 1970s — I thought we could use a little more tradition around here," J.T. said.

"It was just something that hadn't been done in a while," the Bandit said. "With finals coming up, I just wanted to remind everybody to let it all hang out."

New computer should improve fee payment

RENEE DENNIS
Collegian

FEE PAYMENT
■ The only students who will need to stop at the financial-aid table will be those receiving outside scholarships or Stafford and Perkins loans.

Shorter lines and easier fee payment are foreseen at K-State because of a new computer system that directly applies financial aid to tuition and fees.

The only students who need to stop at the financial-aid table at spring registration will be those receiving outside scholarships or Stafford and Perkins loans, Larry Moeder, director of the Office of Student Financial Assistance, said.

There are two main facets to the new Billings and Retrievables System. First, it allows central billing for all offices on campus. Second, it allows students to pay bills in one lump sum.

"If funds are left over after the bills are paid, the student gets one check," Moeder said.

Don Foster, University registrar, said the system would include fees such as athletic tickets, housing payments, library fines, traffic tickets and just about anything a student is charged for on campus.

He said the system is similar to a credit card and that students eventually would be billed monthly.

For the spring semester, however, only tuition and fees will be billed. The financial aid applied to those bills will include Pell Grants, Supplemental Educational Opportunity Grants and University and state scholarships.

"At registration you will receive a copy of your class schedule and your billing statement telling you whether you owe money or have money coming to you," Moeder said. "Then you will go to the cashier to either receive the remaining financial aid or pay the balance."

Doug Ackley, assistant controller, said it is imperative that students check at the cashier's table to get their spring schedules activated. Ackley is in charge of installing the system.

"We plan to go live with the system this weekend," he said. "People who still owe tuition and fees will be converted to BRS. Those debts will be on the bill at spring registration."

If all goes as expected during spring registration, billing by mail will be used in the fall semester.

"Next fall, for students who enroll early, the only reason to go to registration will be for certain types of financial aid," Foster said. "Our current plan is to have a payment deadline very near August 1."

Those who do not pay their bills by the deadline will have their schedules dropped.

Cutbacks possible in education fund

TARA FOSTER
Collegian

BUDGET CUTS

How the Leasure Hall tutoring services' finance needs are met:

| | |
|---|---|
| This year 's budget | $57,500 |
| EOF contributions | – $49,500 |
| Non-EOF sources | $8,000 |

Michael Lynch, director of academic assistance, requested $57,600 in funds. That request was decreased to $40,000 because of money shortages. As a result, 3,500 hours of tutoring will be cut.

A proposal to cut requests totaling $550,000 from the Educational Opportunity Fund will be up for a final vote at tonight's Student Senate meeting.

The EOF's budget was set at $200,000, but the sum of the requests from organizations was $750,000. Therefore, the EOF had to cut back or eliminate some programs.

The EOF provides money toward scholarships for under-represented groups and graduate-assistant programs and services.

The Student Senate EOF committee's goal with the fund is to provide more direct money for scholarships instead of providing indirect money toward the assistant positions, said Michael Henry, arts and sciences senator and member of the committee.

"We are not being tightwads with the money," he said. "The money doesn't exist."

The money for the fund comes from student fees — $6 for a full-time student and $3 for part-time. The fund is a refund of tuition that is collected and has a 2-percent return.

One group that relies heavily on the fund is the tutoring program located in Leasure Hall, which receives the majority of its funding from the EOF. Michael Lynch, director of the Academic Assistance Center, said he is concerned about the decrease of money being allotted to the tutoring center.

"I'm concerned because in the tutoring program alone it represent a serious cutback," Lynch said.

The Leasure Hall tutoring center is the only one offered to all students. The other is in Holton Hall, and a person must financially qualify and meet certain criteria to be eligible.

Only 300 students use this tutoring service, as compared to the more than 2,000 students who use the Leasure Hall program.

This cut will result in a reduction of 1,900 hours or sessions of tutoring. Lynch said he does not have the $8,000 for next year as he did for this year.

Support groups provide needed help for AIDS patients, families

LEIGH NEVANS
Collegian

Financial, emotional and medical support are important to a person living with the HIV virus.

Joan Smith, Riley County health educator, said there are a few support groups for people with AIDS in Manhattan.

Manhattan AIDS program is one of these groups. This group provides help needed to people affected by HIV, Smith said.

Some areas the groups deals with are risk reduction education, a speakers bureau, and a support group for those who are HIV positive, or have AIDS, as well as their families, she said.

The Riley County Health Department has testing and counseling that is both anonymous and confidential, Smith said.

"The expense for one HIV positive person is astronomical," she said. "It's unbelievable."

Paper work is done for Social Rehabilitative Services and Social Security so AIDS patients can receive the services they need.

"When someone gets the disease, we make their life as comfortable as possible," Smith said.

There is a process to take care of needs and then to get the person into a support group.

"We look at immediate needs like medical, financial, and food. We help tell friends and family, and counsel on not spreading the disease," Smith said.

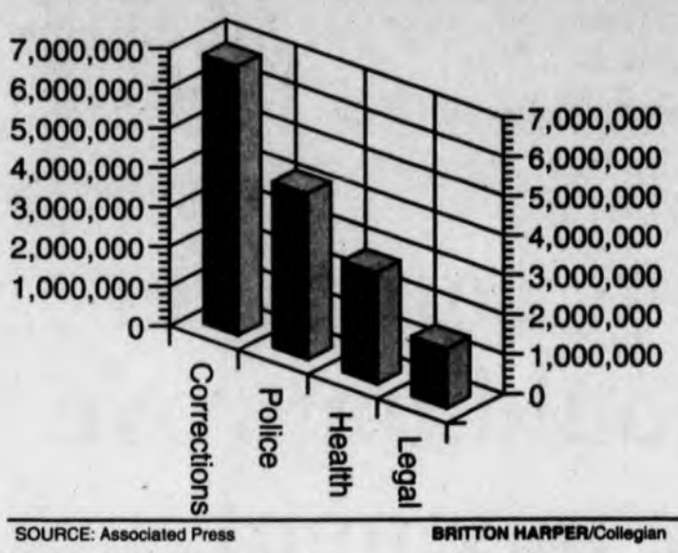
"There are two support groups in town to help them through the disease," she said.

One is for HIV positive people only and the second is for the person and their friends and family, she said.

"There's a lot of hurt and confusion with this disease this offers a medium for help," Smith said. "They go through quite a phone path to get into the group."

Location of the meetings is kept a secret because of fear, picketing, and personal safety, she said.

"We do have mothers in town who have lost children, who help with support groups," Smith said.



"There's a lot of cases here (Manhattan)," she said. "We have a lot of people who come home to die."

"There are people in town who know they have the disease and are practicing unsafe sex and are spreading it around. Some might not know they have it because they

Panel will discuss 'Winds of Change'

The campus group Friends of Europe is planning an evening of European culture, food, entertainment and discussion for tomorrow.

A panel discussion focusing on the changes taking place in Europe will be at 4:30 p.m. in Union 206.

"Zoran Hodgere is flying in from Washington, D.C., to participate in the discussion," Constanze Voigt, graduate student in business and president of the group, said. "He has been very active in the International Monetary Fund."

Additional panel members include Dale Herspring, head of the political science department; John Daly, associate professor of history; Rade Radovich, a doctoral student in international relations, specializing in the Balkan region; and Karsten Teske, a graduate student in agricultural economics from the former East Germany.

"The title of our discussion is 'Winds of Change' after the song by the Scorpions, a German rock group," Voigt said.

She said the song was about the changes that took place in Russia, and now that Europe is changing so much it applies there as well.

The second part of the evening will begin at 7:30 p.m. in the International Student Center.

"We're going to have European snacks to give an impression of what there is from the different countries," Voigt said. "We're also planning to have Spanish, Irish, German and Austrian music, dancing and games."

Voigt said everyone is welcome to attend.

"This is our first semester on campus. We want people to be aware we're here, and hopefully more people will get involved," Voigt said.

Anderson offices nearing completion

The renovation of Anderson Hall from the fire on Aug. 20 will be nearly completed this Friday.

The contractor started renovation of Anderson Oct. 6, Mike McGivern, project manager for Senne and Co. Inc., the company that is completing the renovations, said.

Because the renovations are almost completed, some offices are being set up in Anderson again.

On Wednesday, furniture for the cashiers office was delivered, Skyler Harper, associate University architect, said.

The office will be set up Friday and Monday. Everyone should be back in the office by Tuesday.

The University Attorney's office also began moving back in Wednesday, Harper said.

Furniture for President Jon Wefald's office will also be moved back in today, Harper said.

The woodwork in the office had been maintained and oiled so it did not have to be replaced.

News Services will not move back into Anderson until Dec. 10, after the Landon Lecture, as a matter of convenience, Harper said.

All contractors and suppliers involved have made an effort to make sure everything was done on time, McGivern said.

The ceilings and floors had to be replaced because of water damage, Harper said. While the ceilings were torn out the opportunity was taken to strengthen the structural integrity of the building.

Harper also said new smoke detectors, alarms and pull stations have been installed during renovations and after the work is completed, lightening protection will be added to the roof.

Government to buy land damaged by flood

WASHINGTON (AP) — Thousands of acres of land inundated during the summer floods would be converted to wetlands in eight states under governmental $15-million program.

The Emergency Wetlands Reserve Program was part of the disaster bill passed this year by Congress, but rules were just released on how people can sell their land to the government. Demand is expected to far exceed the amount of money available.

Until Dec. 30, land owners in Missouri, Kansas, Illinois, Iowa, Nebraska, Minnesota, Wisconsin and South Dakota can submit applications to their local Soil Conservation Service offices.

Small wildlife on campus tolerate human presence

BRENT DUNGAN
Collegian

K-State has a pretty wild campus. Many animals call K-State's campus home for a season or the whole year.

Robert Robel, professor of biology, said there are many animals living on campus in much the same way they would be in a natural wood-lot setting.

Some of the animals include squirrels, rabbits, red foxes, skunks, opossums, hawks, snakes, owls and raccoons, Robel said.

Robel said the only adaptations the animals have had to make is getting used to humans.

"The animals have become tolerant of human presence," Robel said.

Some of the animals are not noticed by students because they are primarily nocturnal, or night feeders, Robel said.

Robert Henderson, professor of animal sciences and industry, said several types of bats roost in the trees, and even in the attics of campus buildings. Some of the bats stay in groups, while others prefer to be by themselves, Henderson said.

Owls, which roost in trees, also feed at night on mice that inhabit the area, Robel said.

A common form of wildlife on campus are the fox squirrels. The squirrels bury their food during the fall and dig it up during the winter, Robel said.

Robel said food is never a problem for the animals on campus because of human intervention.

"If anything we might be making food more available," Robel said. Raccoons feed on some of the trash left by humans, he said.

Some of the animals leave Kansas for the winter, including the Kestrel, a small hawk. The Kestrel makes its home on the buildings on campus during the summer and leaves K-State around the fall for warmer climates, Robel said.

The agronomy and dairy farms surrounding campus have attracted many larger animals, Henderson said. Henderson tracked bobcats and Least weasels — small weasels — behind Call Hall. The beef barns have been visited by coyotes, deer and weasels, Henderson said.

Exercise can compensate for eating too much holiday fare

LISA STAAB
Collegian

During holiday celebrations, individuals eat traditional foods often high in fat and calories. But is it at the expense of extra weight?

Martha Ann Olson, registered and licensed dietitian at Lafene Health Center, said people can still eat their favorite foods and maintain good nutrition without gaining extra pounds.

Olson said she believes students eat better during special holidays because the meals are more balanced with meats, vegetables and potatoes. However, she said, some foods contain higher fat grams and calories.

"In normal food preparation, don't add extra fats to keep down the caloric intake and lipids," she said.

Olson also suggested individuals enjoy the holidays and eat the food they desire, just in smaller portions.

"The holidays are different than everyday eating, but we should enjoy those special days throughout the year," Olson said. "Don't scold yourself — just keep eating carrots and broccoli and drinking milk."

Tammy Lough, senior in elementary education, said her habits do not change during the holidays.

"Exercise and eating healthy will be my New Year's resolution — that way I can eat big over the holidays," Lough said.

In addition, Olson said an exercise routine is important to maintain a level of fitness. She said some students maintain a regular exercise routine and others compensate for their increased food intake.

Stan Stadig, junior in pre-physical therapy, exercises more to prevent gaining weight.

"I'll eat like I normally would during the holidays," he said. "But I compensate with more exercise."

Olson said students should not be obsessed with exercise. Instead, she suggested a good practice is to exercise for a 30-minute period for three or four days a week.

TIPS TO KEEP EXERCISE FUN

- Go easy - even modest amounts of exercise add up.
- Vary activities to keep yourself interested.
- Choose an exercise you really enjoy, not one you think you should do.
- Exercise with friends or family members if you want support or company. Plan social or family gatherings around exercise such as dancing, ice skating and hiking.
- Chart your progress and reward yourself.
- Get enough sleep so you can keep your energy up.

EDITORIAL

Clinton's first year as President full of definite successes

If you are a Republican or a Democrat, or neither, you have to admit President Clinton has made some dramatic positive steps during his first year in office.

And given the problems he had to begin with, it is remarkable he has had any noteworthy accomplishments at all.

Two of his greatest successes, the budget bill and the North American Free Trade Agreement, will bring genuine improvements to America, despite resistance to them.

Also, his quick response to the plethora of national-natural disasters that struck last summer and this fall outstrip those made by his predecessors.

The recent passage of the Brady Bill also can be attributed to his strong support for the first real effort Congress has made to curb the rampant violence in the United States.

And congratulations are in order for his intervention into the American Airline strike, diverting a possible national transportation disaster during one of the busiest times of the year.

His successes also stretch outside the Western Hemisphere.

In dealing with North Korea's growing tenacity concerning nuclear arms regulations, Clinton has chosen to be a diplomat rather than a politician. This requires a conciliatory approach, not simply demonizing a country, which is much easier to do.

With North Korea's national reputation going down the drain because it won't stop nuclear testing and growth, Clinton has perhaps the best chance to bring them back into the fold. And that is no small feat in itself.

Yes, campaign promises have been broken, or at least compromised by those resisting change. Allowing homosexuals to serve in the military is the most outstanding example of this.

But playing the role of the most powerful individual on the planet requires the ability to succeed. And as the old saying goes, you only need to win 51 percent of the time to be a success.

May he continue the good work for another three years.

The terrors of being a home owner

BRAD SEABOURN

I realize most of you who read this newspaper are transient, apartment/dorm dwellers during the school year, which, in the opinion of most home-owners, is probably the lowest form of life known to exist — with the possible exception of the teenage-mutant dweeb who frequently runs off with my morning newspaper on the way to school.

Or the soon-to-be-shot-dead-in-the-street canine Clydesdale that mysteriously leaves these enormous, naturally excreted monuments to the Great Pyramids on my front lawn. Normally I would not complain, but the latest occurrence actually caused the outside temperature near my house to drop ten degrees due to loss of sunlight.

Yes, as tenement scum on the great residential pond of life, I know you are anxiously awaiting the day when you have the financial wherewithal to move up the domicile-social scale to that sacred and holy level known as: Home Owner.

There really is nothing like home ownership.

In fact, some significant natural laws change the moment you become a home owner. For instance, that backed-up toilet spewing like Krakatoa is no longer your dorm janitor's backed-up toilet, it is now your backed-up Krakatoa toilet.

That broken sewer or leaky roof, or that kid your son recently had over for lunch who turned out to be a very well-dressed cockroach is no longer the problem of your land-lord: It is your broken-sewer-leaky-roof-cockroach problem.

You obviously now see the magnitude of the mole-hill.

And there are the psychological changes too — the type that cause you to take a perfectly normal Sunday dedicated to beer, football and serious contemplation of the vast mysteries of life (sleeping), and turn it into the Do-It-Yourself Sunday From Hell.

I am talking about the bleary-eyed, slack-jawed look that comes upon a man when his spouse suggests he build a new deck or paint the house or fix the washing machine. I am talking about the cheap, demeaning, manipulative devices a woman uses (sex, food and more sex) to convince a man to climb a tall, rickety, early Incan wooden ladder to shingle the roof.

Yes, I am talking about the absolute mental derangement that overcomes a man when he sees a box of No. 10 common nails or a can of Multipurpose Ceramic Wall and Vinyl Tile Adhesive.

I am talking about this past weekend. Something did indeed come over me.

I am not exactly sure what, but something grabbed the lower parts of my utility belt and caused me to do something that would normally make any male weak at the knees: I DECIDED TO REPLACE THE OLD, WORN-OUT, PERFECTLY USABLE KITCHEN CARPET WITH NEW, VINYL FLOOR TILE.

(Brief pause for the male readership to up-chuck stomach contents.)

Now, I can hear all the high-pitched, whiny, nagging, estrogen-laden voices out there ask, "OK buster, so how bad was it?" Well, the entire process went something like this:

I began by cutting and pulling perfectly usable carpet away from the floor with a utility knife and pliers. To my pleasant surprise I found that the rubber backing remained stuck to the floor with some sort of pre-Cambrian ooze commonly used as an adhesive for false teeth and ceramic tiles on the space shuttle.

My 6 year-old son then asked a perfectly sane question: "Dad, why are you tearing up the floor?"

I continued my renovation and beautification process through skilled and delicate use of blow torch, hammer, and chisel — but mostly blow torch.

My 6 year-old son again asked: "Dad, why are you tearing up the floor?"

You can not begin to imagine my complete surprise when, having cleared away most of the carbon (formally rubber and the first inch or so of wood floor), I found: A PERFECTLY USABLE TILE FLOOR UNDERNEATH.

Ha! Well, let me tell you I was so overjoyed that, literally, with tears in my eyes, I attacked that perfectly usable tile floor with a vigor and intensity normally reserved for mortal combat and heated marital debate over whether the toilet seat should remain up or down.

Once again, my 6 year-old son asked, "Dad, why are you tearing up the floor?"

"Because it is MY floor and I can do ANY #%*$&@! THING I want to with it!" Such are the privileges of home ownership.

"Now stand back son while I ignite this plastic explosive."

Alpha Phi Alpha guides students and makes the difference in learning

Editor,

We, the staff of Manhattan Middle School, would like to take a moment to publicly recognize and thank the men of the Alpha Phi Alpha Fraternity of K-State for their commitment and effort to help some of the young men of our school.

For the past year, these men have provided a mentoring relationship where they have conducted weekly tutoring opportunities, occasional field trips, dinners out, and participation in athletic and cultural events. Our students have looked up to these fine men as outstanding role models.

We are grateful for the time and effort that have been invested and the concern shown by the fraternity. They have made a difference in the lives of many of our students.

▶ SELF-DEFENSE

If cops are going to teach karate, then why not teach whole college?

Editor,

With assaults on this campus at an all-time high, it was with some amusement, mixed with alarm, that I observed one of K-State's finest doughnut eaters parked in the Justin Hall parking lot.

With engine running and flashers flashing, he stood in the lot for at least 30 minutes (about 12:50 to 1:25 p.m.) talking to two young men. What they were discussing I don't know, but from my perch on high one could clearly see an assortment of animated gestures interspersed with an occasional mock karate flip, kick or playful jab. One can only summarize that the "officer (term used loosely for lack of a better word) was giving those lads lessons in self-defense.

Unfortunately, their education was cut short because the officer's vehicle had to be moved as it was blocking a faculty member's reserved stall.

Now, the only reason I noted this activity was because I recall seeing a campus security vehicle in almost the exact same spot at about the same time on Monday. So, I'm wondering: Is this a class? Does it meet Monday, Wednesday and Friday or just Monday and Wednesday? And if they are learning self-defense, shouldn't more than two students be allowed to take the class?

▶ LET ME IN

If professors post office hours, then they should be there for students

Editor,

I am writing to express my views about professors posting their office hours. Many times I have wished to meet with professors during these times, only to find they were not in their office.

Because most professors only have office hours for several hours each week, I believe it is important for them to be available to their students. It is almost impossible to track them down at other times during the week, even for long enough to make an appointment.

I realize that professors are very busy people and at times conflicts arise in their scheduling. However, it is important for students to have access to their teachers to voice problems and concerns. This is even more critical during enrollment, when many people need to add classes.

Professors should realize their students often need them outside of the classroom, and I hope they will attempt to be more readily available.

'And justice for all' must apply to all or it means nothing at all

IN ONE OF THE MORE RECENT APPEALS FOR A NEW TRIAL, THE PROSECUTOR ADMITTED, "WE DO NOT KNOW WHO KILLED THESE MEN."

On Nov. 23, the people of this nation again mourned the loss of John F. Kennedy. For 30 years, we have speculated on who really killed JFK and why. According to one of the media polls, an amazing 80 percent of those polled do not believe the Warren Commission told the whole truth, that Oswald did not act alone, and that there was probably some sort of cover-up. For 30 years, we have demanded a full and unbiased investigation so justice might be served.

Twelve years after Kennedy was killed, three men were killed in a shootout in South Dakota. A suspect was arrested and subsequently convicted of two of those murders. Some time later, the evidence on which the man was convicted was found to have been fabricated, while other evidence proving the man's innocence was concealed.

Appeals to have the case re-tried have been denied on a variety of bases. There was little public outrage, nor much hue and cry for a full and unbiased investigation of the incident.

Convicted on the basis of highly-questionable evidence, Leonard Peltier has now served 17 years in a federal prison for two murders he did not commit. In one of the more recent appeals for a new trial, the prosecutor admitted, "We do not know who killed these men."

When I was a child, and recited the Pledge of Allegiance every morning, I believed those words "with liberty and justice for all."

As a young adult, I still wanted to believe them; however, I have felt very discouraged and skeptical as I found out things were not always what they seemed. As an older and more experienced adult, I do believe them — but I also know that we still have a long way to go to achieve that ideal state of justice.

Heaven knows I get tired of getting blamed for every evil under the sun.

I get irritated at feeling like I have to justify my existence as a white European American, and I resent being stereotyped so often by the very same people who decry the unfairness of stereotypes.

I am a white European American, and I refuse to apologize for that, or to accept some vague generic blame for every bad thing done to anyone by every white person for the past 500 years. So, what does this have to do with anything?

DOROTHY ROBERTS ARVIZU
GUEST COLUMNIST

Quite a bit, really. On the other hand, the irrefutable facts of our history are that a lot of bad things were done by an awfully large number of European Americans to whole continents of non-European Americans. While I refuse to accept the blame for the actions of long-dead strangers, I cannot escape the very real consequences of those actions.

In the case of JFK, we may never know the whole truth, and we will have to learn to live with that uncertainty.

In the case of Leonard Peltier and the blatant abuse and manipulation of our justice system we can do something. If we are serious about "justice for all," we must not turn our backs and hope someone (else) will do something about it. Our system of justice is based on the ideal of personal responsibility, and it only works when each of us stand up and demand that justice serve us all.

On Monday, the Rev. Jesse Jackson addressed the need for awareness, for personal responsibility and for conscious change. We cannot change the past, but with every conscious, aware action we take to change the present, we influence the future.

Leonard Peltier has served nearly 18 years in prison for a crime he did not commit. It is time to say, "enough is enough," and let him go. Our justice system isn't perfect, but it is one of the best in the world when we each take the responsibility to make it work.

Before you go home for the holidays, please take a few minutes to stop by the Student Governing Association office and sign a petition requesting the release of Leonard Peltier.

If petitions aren't your style, you can sent a message to President Clinton via e-mail at: PRESIDENT@-WHITEHOUSE.GOV.

Some amazing things begin to happen when we, the American people, stand up and tell our government "enough is enough" — but first we each have to make the decision to stand.

Stephan OKs student fees for political groups

BOB MACHA
Collegian

K-State Student Body President Ed Skoog said a legal opinion issue recently by the attorney general regarding the allocation of money to political groups is not going to affect K-State.

The legal opinion by the Kansas attorney general Bob Stephan's office on Nov. 4 states it is OK for universities to collect mandatory fees and use the money for educational purposes and political organizations. Stephen, however, said money can't be use for lobbying and off-campus activities.

"The only judicial decision that has been made in California, and this is not California," Skoog, senior in English, said.

The legal opinion is not binding as Stephan enforces existing laws rather than creating new ones.

Earlier this year the California Supreme Court ruled in Smith versus Regents of the University of California that the use of student fee money for lobbying and in support of ideological student organizations violated the free speech and association rights of dissenting students.

The controversy arose when Rep.Tim Shallenburger, R-Baxter Springs, asked Stephan how the California case would affect Kansas.

The attorney general's office is in the process of drafting a clarification, which was requested by Kansas Rep. Kent Glasscock of Manhattan, Deputy State Attorney General Julene Miller said.

Miller said the attorney general's office is busy with another project and will issue a classification of the opinion in about two weeks. The ambiguous portion was what activities are lobbying and that are educational as part of the mission of a university.

Glasscock said he reminded the attorney general that lobbying efforts had gone toward advocacy work and not specific pieces of legislation. He said the lobbying had been done on educational issues such as library funding.

"I sense he didn't have this in mind," he said. "I think it's critical that this activity not stop," Glasscock said.

He said the legal opinion has no standing under law and would have to enter litigation

Sarah Caldwell, senior in English and economics and chair of the Student Senate Finance Committee, said,"It has the potential, but it is not affecting us right now."

"We have no plans to stop our lobbying effort," she said. "If we were to stop, we would do a great disservice to the University and college-age people. We are the only voice for people our age in the state."

Hospice helps care for, counsel the terminally ill

have it because they don't have symptoms," Smith said.

The most important thing is to enter into a mutually monogamous relationship, she said.

Hospice offers a different kind of support.

"Hospice is in home care for patients with a life-limiting illness. It's for people who aren't actively trying to cure their illness," Jennifer Boyda, social worker at Homecare and Hospice, said.

"You have to be emotionally ready for Hospice," she said. "We don't have any AIDS patients right now."

Most AIDS patients are young and try aggressive treatment up until the end, she said.

People involved with Hospice are volunteers, nurses, social workers and religious leaders.

"Volunteers go into the home regularly," Boyda said. "It gives the care taker some space."

The nurses go in to take care of hygiene and other medical needs, she said.

Counseling is received from the social worker and the minister.

The minister deals with spiritual issues like fear, God and what will happen to the person once they die, Boyda said.

"What we do is guide them," she said.

Hospice also has counseling for family members.

"We have family meetings with and without the patients," Boyda said. "It's a great time for them to share."

Hospice follows a patient through the illness and death, then the family is followed for 18 months while they are grieving, she said.

"We have two support groups for the families after the person dies," Boyda said. "These are open to the community."

Hospice doesn't turn away people who can't afford their care.

"We provide care to anyone who needs it regardless of ability to pay," she said.

The reason Hospice can do this is through donations and memorials people give in the name of their loved ones, Boyda said.

One example of a memorial is the poinsettia tree in Manhattan Town Center, where a person can donate money and have a dove ornament put on the tree with their loved one's name on it.

Wildcats defeat Aggies, improve record to 1-1

BRIAN ANDERSON
Collegian

The K-State basketball team gained its first win of the season, with the help of Askia Jones' 27 points, beating Texas A&M 63-54 Wednesday in Bramlage Coliseum.

K-State was able to out rebound, 40 to 31, and force more turnovers than the Aggies, 22 to 14.

Coach Dana Altman said he was pleased with the team's defense.

"For the most part, our defense intensity was good," Altman said.

"Inside, we did a good job on (forward Damon) Johnson. Anthony (Beane) did a decent job on (guard David) Edwards, but there were a couple of breakdowns."

Deryl Cunningham and Ron Lucas held Johnson, who scored 24 points and 14 rebounds in the team's last game against Bucknell, to just 10 points and six rebounds.

Beane forced Edwards, who was on the preseason first-team all-Southwestern Conference squad, into eight turnovers and four of 10 shooting from the field.

The victory meant a great deal to the team, Beane said.

"We didn't want to get behind. I'm glad we got the win," Beane said.

"We knew we had to do it on the defensive end. We've got to continue to improve. We got the win, and that's what is most important."

Beane said he was glad to see Jones play in the game.

"I'm happy to see Ski," Beane said. "Something like tonight was great. He lifted us up when he came in."

Texas A&M (1-1) jumped out to a 6-0 lead when Altman sent in Jones.

From there, K-State went on a 12-0 run, including seven points from Jones, and would not give up the lead for the rest of the game.

Altman said Jones was a key factor in the game.

"With his leadership, he helped guide people into the right places," Altman said.

"He was in for at least 90 percent of our points — and he just played 26 minutes."

With the return of Jones, everything seemed to run better for the Wildcats, Lucas said.

"If anyone knows the offense, it's Ski," Lucas said.

"He is the backbone to our offense. We didn't know what to expect when he got onto the court, but we were able to get it done with him out there."

Lucas said it was a goal to play better defense than the Cats played in the Southern Mississippi game.

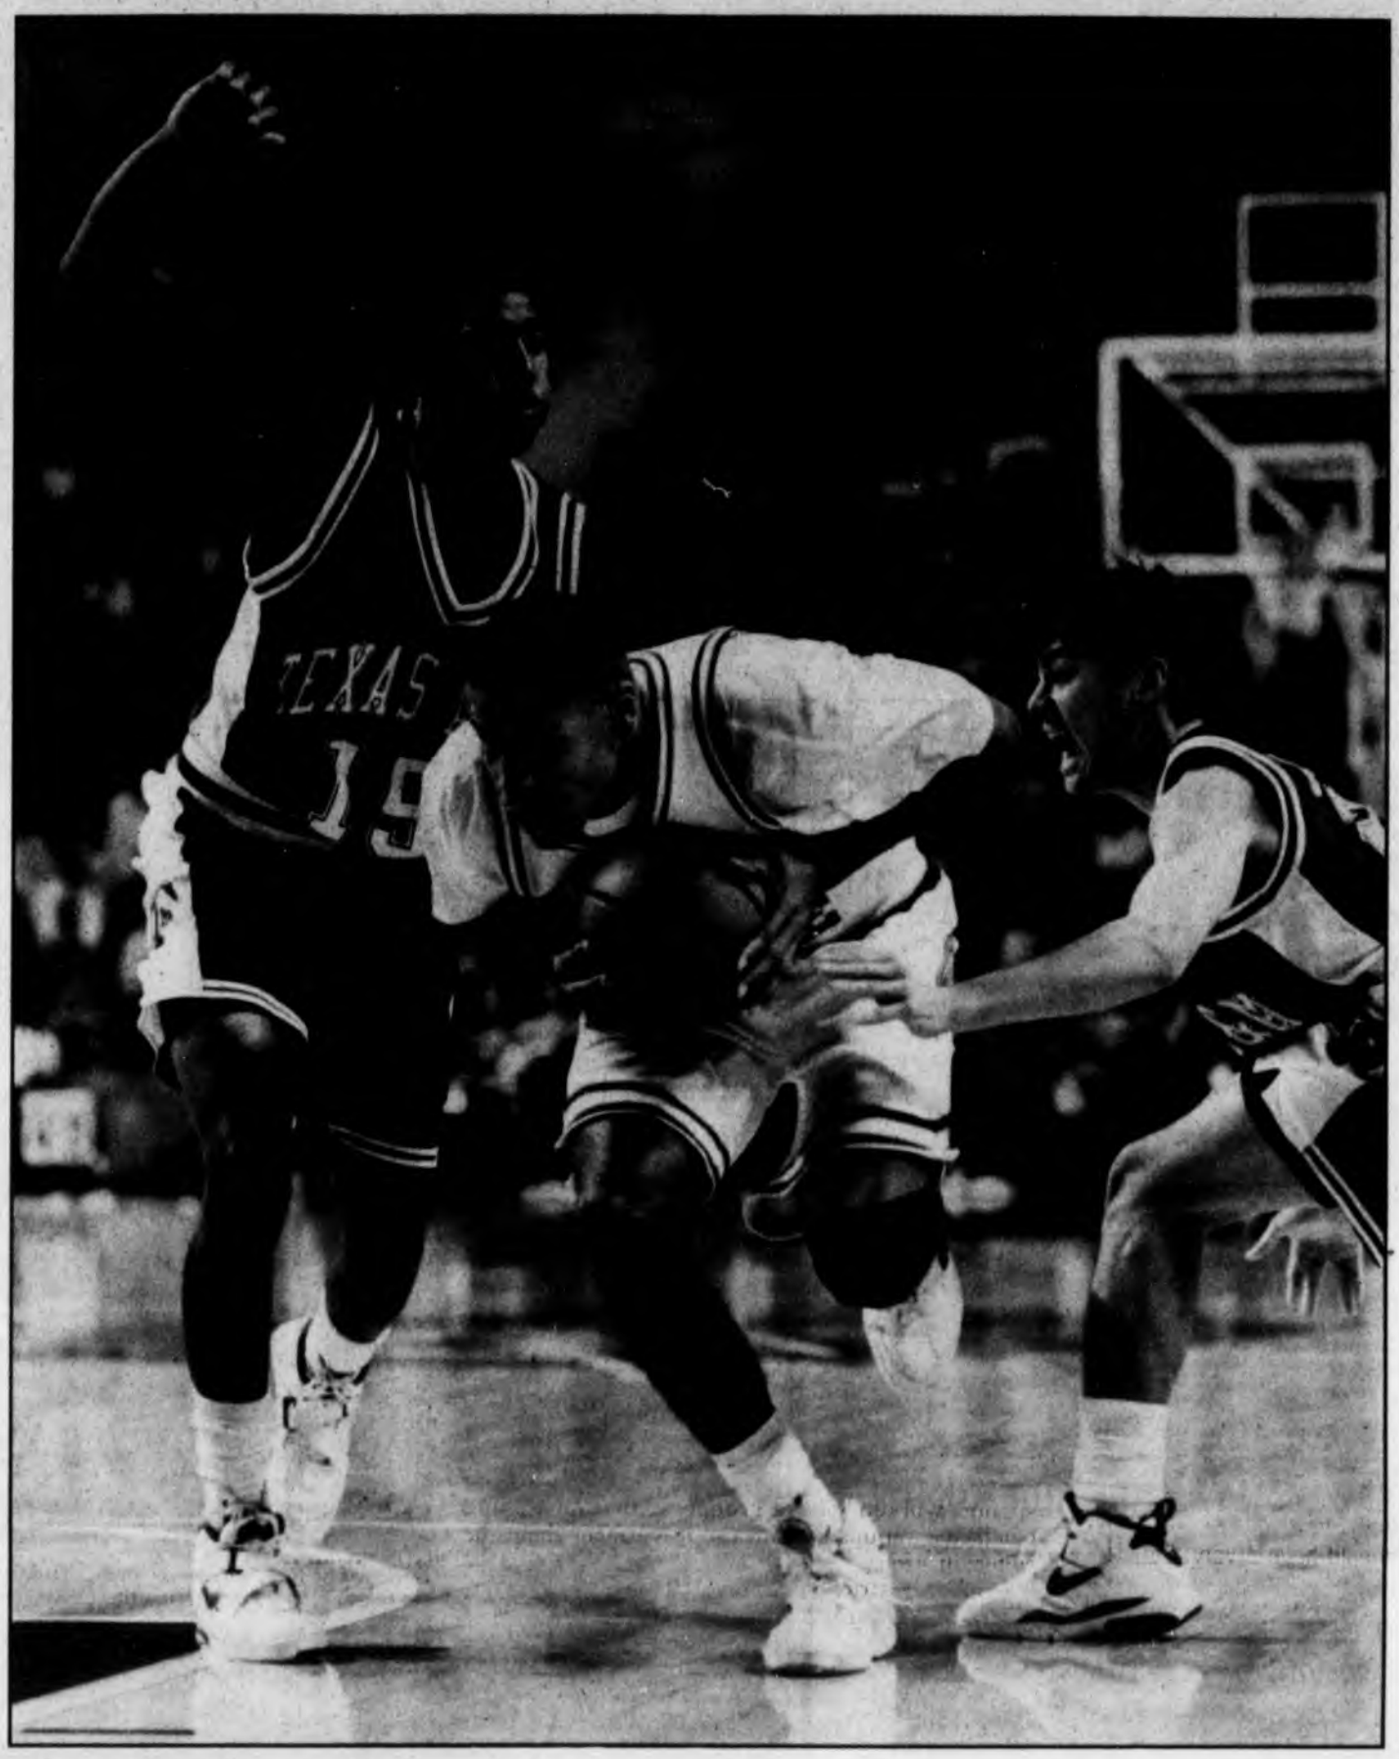
The Cats lost to the Golden Eagles 74-60 last Saturday.

"We tried to out-rebound them and hold them to one shot. For the most part, we did that.

"We didn't want anyone to beat us in our house."

Demond Davis also contributed to the first win of the season.

Davis recorded a double-double for the second-straight game with 10 points and 12 rebounds to follow up a 12-point, 13-rebound effort against Southern Mississippi.



The last player to do that was Wylie Howard in the 1991-92 season.

Altman said he hoped the win would carry over as the Cats play four home games in the next 10 days.

"We needed to win. I love the effort," Altman said.

"When things didn't go well, we were able to hang with it. I'm glad we found a way to win.

"We don't have much practice in the next couple of days. So, we got to find a way to get the defense going," he said.

Return of Jones bodes well for Cats

DEREK SIMMONS
Collegian

Askia Jones made his senior-season debut Wednesday night.

And not a moment too soon for K-State.

Jones' 27 points fueled the Wildcats' 63-54 victory against Texas A&M, their first win of the season.

The 6-foot-5 shooting guard entered the game with 17:21 left in the first period and with 16:45 to play, hit the Cats first bucket.

Jones returned to the line-up after being hospitalized Nov. 1, with a swollen left knee. He had arthroscopic surgery and spent the past three weeks nursing the injury.

"I'm glad he played," Coach Dana Altman said. "Without him we wouldn't have won that game. He was definitely the difference in that ball game."

The Cats almost didn't have him.

Jones said he decided to suit up about 30 minutes before the contest.

"My parents didn't want me to play," said Jones, who shot nine for 14 from the field, including four of seven 3-pointers. "I talked to them last night and today because I was getting the catheter taken out today. My dad left early this morning and told me not to play, and my mom said the same thing. But they said, you're a grown man and do what you want."

Altman said he intended to play Jones about eight or nine minutes in each half, but Jones ended up contributing 26 minutes of playing time.

"The 26 minutes that he played, I would say that about 90 percent of our points came in that period," Altman said. "He made such a difference for our team."

Texas A&M managed to mount a comeback with 13:36 left in the game, cutting its deficit to four points at 42-38.

But Jones silenced the Aggies with back-to-back 3-pointers, giving the Cats a 48-38 edge.

"He's had more starts than anyone out there, and he gives us that extra spurt we need," Ron Lucas said.

Aggie coach Tony Barone agreed that Jones was the catalyst to K-State's win.

"Ski Jones was obviously the difference," Barone said. "I thought he hit about three threes from 30 feet."

Jones made his final 3-pointer with 8:23 to go, increasing the Cats' lead to 55-43. On the ensuing play, Jones drew a charging foul from Corey Henderson and hit both ends of his one-and-one free throws, putting the game out of reach for Texas A&M at 57-43.

"He wanted to play," Altman said. "I didn't think he would play that well — I just thought he would give us some leadership. He doesn't shoot the ball that well when he's in shape. Maybe we just need to leave him out of shape."

BRIEFLY

- K-State is now 12-1 in games that Askia Jones scores 20 points or more.
- Jones now has 1,132 career points and has moved past Willie Murrell into 10th place on the all-time career scoring charts at K-State.

K-State volleyball must look toward future in decision to keep Hagemeyer as coach

It's time for a change.

After three losing seasons, two winless seasons in the Big Eight Conference, an 11-match losing streak last season and a 16-match losing streak this season, volleyball coach Patti Hagemeyer should be replaced.

For the past two seasons Hagemeyer has said the program will turn around and make progress.

JEREMY CRABTREE

But it's a cold hard fact that the program still hasn't turned around.

This is especially true in light of this season's 7-24 record.

Maybe it's her assistant coaches who can't recruit, or maybe it's Hagemeyer herself, but several local recruits have overlooked K-State.

Take Wamego's Leslie Turkeypile for example.

Turkeypile was selected to the 4A all-state team this season at Wamego High School, but she wasn't even recruited by K-State.

Because of that she will sign a national letter of intent to play volleyball with Kansas, Richard Jensen, athletic director at Wamego High School, said.

The volleyball program had a winning record before Hagemeyer was named coach at K-State.

Before Hagemeyer, the Wildcats suffered through two-straight losing seasons with records of 11-19 in 1989 and 11-15 in 1990, but the program still had a winning record of 349-344-13.

In fact, the Cats have been to the Big Eight tournament 12 times, but this all changed as this season's 7-24 mark dropped the overall record to 356-368.

Another point that should be brought up is that in Hagemeyer's first season, six players quit the team.

It was widely believed the players were dissatisfied with Hagemeyer's coaching techniques.

Usually a team will improve as the season matures, but the Cats peaked in early October when they went 2-1 in the Drake Invitational.

I've covered the team throughout the season, and Hagemeyer usually put a different line-up on the court every night.

Outside hitter Stephanie Liester and middle blocker Angie McKee went from being the leaders of the team to hardly playing at all, until their final home game of the season.

When Hagemeyer did play Liester and McKee against Kansas, the Cats almost won, which would have snapped their losing streak.

The revolving-door line-up also continued for outside hitter Suzanne Hagge.

Hagge earned her way into the starting line-up in the middle of the season but soon found herself on the bench again.

The Cats hired Hagemeyer from Southern Illinois, where she spent only two years as a coach.

Her overall collegiate coaching record is 54-92 in just five years of coaching.

Hagemeyer has had only one winning season as a coach, and that came in her first year at Southern Illinois.

Athletic Director Max Urick was unavailable for comment about Hagemeyer's job status for next season.

Hagemeyer was also unavailable for comment Wednesday because she was in meetings, assistant coach Sue Meledy said.

Maybe it is the players who aren't performing well, but it is the coach's job to get the players ready for the matches, and evidently, Hagemeyer hasn't done that.

The talent is there, but more help is needed with new recruits and a better coach next season.

Actually, the Cats could be contenders in the Big Eight.

■ Biology professor helps NASA

Brian Spooner, professor of biology and director of the Center for Gravitational Studies in Cellular and Developmental Biology at K-State, has been selected by NASA's Division of Life and Biomedical Sciences to serve on the Shuttle/Mir Science Program Peer Review Panel.

The Shuttle/Mir Science Program was produced by an international agreement between the NASA and the Russian Space Agency.

"It's an opportunity to serve the nation and bring recognition to K-State," Spooner said.

The review panel accepts written proposals from scientists who want to conduct experiments, Spooner said.

Scientists testify before the panel, and Spooner said he must be familiar with the proposals so he can participate in discussions.

"Its clear that important research is going to be conducted in space that is important to mankind on earth. Not just space travelers, a larger population will be affected," Spooner said.

Spooner also is involved in NASA by being a principal investigator on a grant from NASA that funds at K-State

In addition, he is a member of the board of governors for the American Society for Gravitational and Space Biology, which is an elected position.

Jim Guikema, associate professor of biology, said he agrees space station research is important in life sciences.

"We must make sure the best science goes forth," he said.

Research should have a very real effect in the next ten years, Guikema said.

"This is important work."

■ Physicist given University award

C. Lewis Cocke, professor of physics, recently received the 1993-94 Conoco Distinguished Graduate Faculty Member Award for his research in accelerator-based atomic physics.

Cocke said the award is a University-wide award, given to two faculty members each year. The other recipient is Jane Westfall, professor of anatomy and physiology.

C. Lewis Cocke

Cocke gave a lecture titled, "When Hot Matter Meets Cold Matter: Getting the Picture," Monday. Cocke discussed the research he and his colleagues conducted in the J.P. McDonald Accelerator Laboratory, located in the basement of Cardwell Hall.

"One of the reasons I went into physics was because I felt that it was something you have to deal with in your mind, " Cocke said.

Cocke said he felt honored to receive the award.

"It's very satisfying that my colleagues at K-State would think that I'm worthy of this award," Cocke said.

The award is chosen by a selection committee, and the existence of this award dates back to 1955, when Hilmer H. Laude, professor of agronomy, was the first recipient.

Westfall has been at K-State since 1967. Her specialty of work involves using electron microscopes, in working with primitive nervous systems and synapses.

"Receiving this award is, at this point, the highest honor in my career," Westfall said.

Professor uses children's stories to teach culture

TORI NIEHOFF
Collegian

One K-State professor has found using fairy tales an effective way to teach multicultural issues.

Gary Willhite, assistant professor in secondary education, did his dissertation on fairy tales and studied the moral and ethical values involved. Since then, he has developed several courses using the stories.

"We can see that the original form of tales can sometimes be brutal and gruesome, but today all we see is the Disney version, which is a direct reflection of our society," Willhite said.

He deals with similar issues when he discusses the traditional values of each fairy tale and how the culture of each is affected.

By studying fairy tales, he said one can see each culture and how it was portrayed in the past.

His classes are attended by a variety of people who bring different experiences to each class discussion.

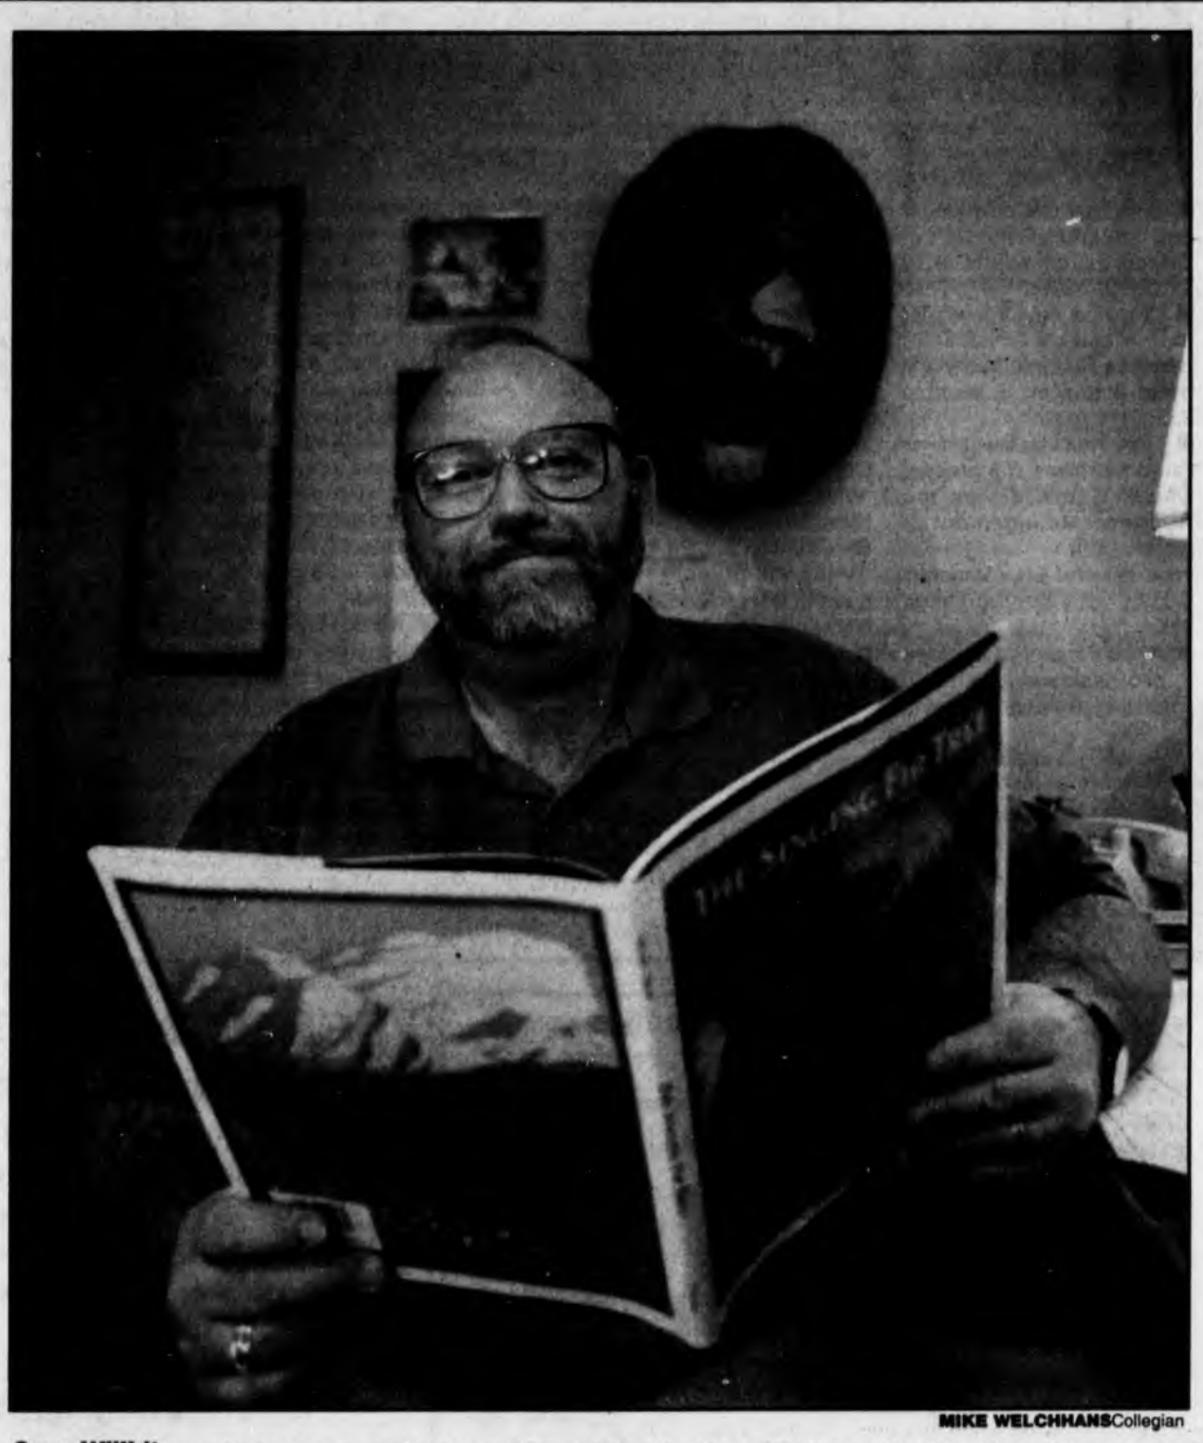
"The last class I taught had a diverse group of students, and they ended up presenting the best set of projects ever submitted," Willhite said. "With all the different students, it created a varied discussion with real-life situations."

He said one project was to design something useful for each individual's type of work or career. If the student didn't work in a classroom, he or she was challenged with creating a different idea.

Nevada Dauber, who was in the Telenet class last fall, works in a retirement community. She organized a staff development program to teach the staff how to understand people of different levels, abilities and cultures.

"I used German and Japanese fairy tales to conduct an in-service for the employees, talking about the negative universal opinions about the elderly," Dauber said. "The elderly should not be thrown out of society, because they have much to offer. Their brains and experience should be utilized and put to work."

Charlotte Clum, who was a student in the class last spring, worked with a group of Girl Scouts and conducted various activities to teach them about the culture of Africa.



"I picked African folklore because I was trying to correlate the activities to a museum we have in Chanute," she said. "I tried to incorporate music, art and dance into a dramatical presentation."

The Girl Scouts rewrote a story into a play, and they will present it to their parents. Besides art and dance, the group also learned about African mask making.

Another of Willhite's students, a foreign language teacher, made the secondary students translate, from Spanish, the tale of Little Red Riding Hood.

The students then cast members for a play and performed it for the elementary students at the school, he said.

Aside from teaching classes at K-State, Willhite said he speaks both on a national and international level.

MIKE WELCHHANS Collegian

Gary Willhite, professor of secondary education, holds a book used in the multicultural fairy-tale class he teaches. The class studies the fairy tales and discusses how they affect society.

He has spoken in many states on the different aspects of multicultural issues in general.

This spring, he will speak in Portland, Ore. The topic will be fairy tales in classrooms, focusing on secondary education.

Willhite recently spoke at the International Conference on Humor and Laughter in Luxembourg City, Luxembourg. He talked about relating fairy tales to society.

The conference was attended by 115 people from 29 different countries.

Willhite said he and his wife experience multiculturalism everyday.

They are host to an exchange student from Denmark. The student, Troels Gram, is a 17-year-old senior at Wamego High School.

Willhite said it has been different to go from having no children to having a high school student around.

"It has been a good learning experience," Willhite said.

"He has helped me understand European attitudes to many different things, and I would recommend hosting a student to anyone who wants to learn about another culture."

Assistance program gives employees education, services

LISA STAAB
Collegian

In a time of a employee crisis, whom do you call?

Employee Assistance Program is an education, intervention and referral service designed to help faculty and staff members identify personal problems.

It also deals with concerns affecting job performance, Patricia Howell, EAP coordinator, said.

Statistics show 9 to 14 percent of the work force will experience personal problems that interfere with job performance, she said.

"It is in the University's interests to help people find assistance for personal issues," Howell said." We want to be proactive and help people find solutions before they turn into performance problems."

Howell, who is available to identify professional resources, said she adheres to a professional code of ethics because the program is confidential.

"I don't serve as a counselor or therapist," she said. "I only put people in touch with agencies or other resources."

Specifically, EAP deals with human problems including marital difficulties, emotional problems, financial problems or alcohol and drug abuse. Howell said most inquiries are financial concerns.

"Currently the calls focus on financial concerns as a result of the floods," she said.

Howell said once an employee identifies his or her problem, she refers that person to the correct resource for assistance, either from a University or local agency. Howell said the family center on campus provides two free sessions to any employee.

"Financial reasons shouldn't be the final factor for someone to receive help," Howell said.

Howell said a 1991 survey showed K-State was only one of 150 universities that had a program similar to EAP out of more than 3,600 universities nationwide.

She said EAP reflects on the caring administration that creates a program to benefit its employees.

Tom Schellhardt, associate vice president for administration and finance, said he agreed the program is beneficial to K-State employees.

"It is important because we care about what is happening in the lives of our employees," Schellhardt said. "If employees are happy with their personal lives, then we have a productive employee at work."

Agricultural extension agents travel to Paraguay

LORI ARMER
Collegian

Thanks to two retired Manhattan men, the country of Paraguay has recently been exposed to new methods of farming and fruit harvesting.

John Schlender, retired extension agriculture economist in farm management, and Norman Schlesener, retired county agriculture extension agent, recently returned from Paraguay on separate missions as part of the Partners of the Americas program.

Partners of the Americas is a program which lines U.S. states up with countries in Central and South America. Together, they exchange technology and assistance in such areas as agriculture, business and the arts, Schlender said.

Schlender traveled to Paraguay to gather data on the livestock industry, specifically the beef cattle industry, and to send back a report of recommendations on supplemental feeding.

"Their research in animal nutrition is not well developed," Schlender said. "I got a picture of the livestock industry and what they need to do in setting up research in nutrition and economics. I didn't find the data I wanted, but that is the point of the problem. I tried to design a program on the profitability of feeding."

Schlender said the problems Paraguay is having can be traced to economics.

"Their beef cattle production is similar to the early Flint Hills times when they just grazed on grass," he said.

"Also, the price of cattle is about half what ours is, and the cost of feed grains is close to double. They haven't done concentrated feeds because of cost."

The country of Paraguay is far behind in the areas of technology, but it has recently developed some supplemental feeding during the times of extreme droughts, Schlender said.

"Until about six years ago, technology and economy didn't progress much," he said. "They've been making an effort to shore up the technology in various areas including the agriculture sector."

Schlesener found similar results while checking on the progress of fruit harvesting.

"Originally, the workers shook the trees to drop the oranges instead of picking them. The idea was to hand pick selectively by the ripest," he said. "They were also shown to make cases to protect the oranges in the trucks. Otherwise, when they arrived in Asuncion, they would be ruined."

Schlesener said their methods are continuing to improve.

"We saw that they were making good progress," he said. "The president of the orange-growers co-op was doing good."

The theories of farming in Paraguay can be traced back to the dictatorship which the country is used to, Schlesener said.

"Much of their history is of things coming from the top down," he said. "People at higher levels are not used to taking into account the people trying to produce and make technological changes. Cooperative extension is cooperating by finding out what the problems are by the people telling what they need."

Along with his research on the fruit industry, Schlesener checked on the dairy producers co-op.

"I got a report that they were ordering an ice cream making machine with their surplus of milk," he said. "Otherwise, people with a surplus sell their milk at market, which lowers the price."

Schlesener also said the producers have been cooperating with the use of model farms, which are set up to instruct others on what works and what doesn't.

Both men spent about two weeks in Paraguay and stressed the advantages the program holds the United States and Paraguay.

"If they can get this done it will be plenty of benefit for the farmers," Schlesener said. "The extension service may be the start of more exchanges. Maybe someone from there can come here and study our extension program."

He said although progress is succeeding, it's a long process.

"I would go back if I had a chance," Schlesener said. "The program was tightly packed with long days, but change and development are seldom dramatic. You have to chip away at it."

Vet-med students get a lesson in business skills

TAWNYA ERNST
Collegian

A career in veterinary medicine calls for more than knowledge of anatomy and physiology in today's world. Business skills have become as important to veterinarians as the tools used for surgery.

In keeping with this idea, K-State's College of Veterinary Medicine has implemented the Veterinary Practice Management program to prepare students for the financial and interpersonal aspects of the business.

The program came about as a result of a combined effort by various universities including K-State, veterinary practitioners, and Hill's Pet Nutrition, Inc., of Topeka.

Other schools have started the program as well, but K-State is the only one to have a center developed for the sole purpose of teaching management, Ray Russell, director of the Hill's National Center for Veterinary Practice Management, said.

Russell said videotapes based on the program are being developed to send to other schools.

The need for business education for veterinary medicine students was realized several years ago, he said.

"The kids are really top notch in the technical side of medicine, but they are deficient, as a whole, in business.

"Practitioners tell me that the new graduates are really prepared from the technical standpoint, but we need to try to give more education on interpersonal skills, marketing and human resources," Russell said.

Through the courses available, he said they hope to rectify that problem and, at the same time, achieve the program's vision to strengthen the economic well-being and quality of life for all veterinarians.

Dr. Tom Caldwell, dean of the veterinary medical center, said he wants to support the economic well-being of veterinary medicine through the program. He hopes to get students to realize the importance of business as well as science in the veterinary field.

"We are helping them understand that they have to make decisions in medicine about finances as well as surgery," Caldwell said.

"They not only have to be constantly weighing interests of what's fair to the client, the patient, but to themselves, the practitioners," he said.

Classes are offered for all but one of the four years of veterinary medicine school. Two required courses in professional development are offered for first-year veterinary students. These classes include an overview of personal planning, decision making, time and stress management, interpersonal skills and the use of computers in veterinary medicine.

"We teach them about the values of real estate, negotiations, decision making," Russell said.

"We try to teach the practical business skills. How to read financial statements, how to keep records, how to buy inventory. We're trying to show them what it costs to operate a practice," he said.

No classes are available for the second year yet. During their third year, students can take an introduction to practice management course that focuses on marketing and financial management.

In this class, students work in groups on a case study involving the purchase or lease of a practice. Students go through the process of negotiating to buy a practice to get more realistic hands-on experience.

Malisha Small, a third-year student in veterinary medicine, said the class gives students more knowledge about what to expect in the real world.

"The class has a lot to do with how to manage a practice by hiring employees and communications with clients," Small said. "It teaches some of the little things that can help you start a practice. It gives me more of an idea of what I'll be expected to know."

In their fourth year, students have the opportunity to apply for a three-week externship in veterinary clinics outside the University.

Two of the weeks are spent at the management center at K-State, the other is spent at an actual practice where the extern gets a chance to see how that practice handles its finances.

Ken Chaffin, fourth-year student in veterinary medicine, has taken all the courses in the program that he can, including an externship. He said what he's learned will possibly provide better career opportunities.

"I think that it's very beneficial," Chaffin said. "It's something that the veterinary profession needs more of. It makes me more marketable and gives me more confidence in going out into the work force."

Confidence and knowledge of business are two things Russell said he hopes students will gain from the program.

"Veterinarians have to know how to be a practitioner, a leader and a manager," Russell said. "They need to have a balance of all three."

Have a listen before you purchase

WILLIAM MCKEEN III
Collegian

Wouldn't it be nice to listen to a CD before buying it?

If it is really bad, then it isn't a waste of money?

The system is called the i-station, and it is available at Streetside Records.

"The i-station allows people to listen to music before buying it, and it is totally free," Mike McRee, senior in psychology who works at Streetside Records, said.

The i-card, available by filling out a short form, is the only thing necessary to run the system, McRee said.

By scanning the bar-code of the i-card across the bar-code reader, a list of options comes on the touch screen. Two people can then use the headphones to listen to the music.

"The system, which is programmed with 34,000 albums, has many uses," McRee said. "It plays all genres from jazz to classical, anything way back but not all modern."

McRee said each run of the card allows a person three minutes of listening time.

"People can choose a CD by artist or title by typing it on the screen or by choosing a CD from those in stock," McCree said.

CDs displaying the i-sticker are the ones which will play on the i-station.

"We have some CDs in the store which the machine won't play," McRee said, "Also, there are CDs programmed into the machine which we don't have in the store."

One catch is the machine does not allow the listener the entire run-through of the album.

"Each CD is only programmed to play five songs," McRee said.

Music is not the only thing people can listen to on the i-station.

"Some of the songs are accompanied by videos," McRee said, "Twenty to 30 videos, which switch randomly, are programmed in the machine."

Another option for people is the Billboard and new releases.

"The system runs off of a modem so that way it is always kept up to date on all new releases," McRee said.

The i-station is sometimes more ahead of the music than the store.

"Some new selections will be on the i-station before it is released in the store," Todd Moriarty, senior in mass communications and employee at Streetside Records, said.

Also, the i-station gives the listener more than just listening pleasure.

"People can even get coupons from listening to certain selections," McRee said.

One controversial point about the system is that it does not censor out the parts of albums that may contain explicit lyrics or give a warning.

"No one who is under the age of 18 can receive an i-card," McRee said.

The i-card has been rather popular among music buyers, McRee said.

"It is a real good deal because there are some CDs out there which I am not sure about because they get no play time, such as a lot of the alternative bands," Adam Mertz, freshman in electrical engineering who was using the system, said.

After reviewing a CD, Mertz didn't buy it. He said he was glad he took the time to listen to it.

"I don't use it every time I buy a CD," Mertz said. "I just use it mainly when I am not sure about some purchases."

Streetside Records is not the only place that offers this system. Wal-Mart offers a similar but less extensive system.

"People can come in to the store and listen to the Top 20 from each category such as rock or country," Bill Clark, senior in computer programming and employee at the Wal-Mart electronic sales department, said.

The Wal-Mart system allows listeners to review three songs at five seconds each, Clark said. The songs are replaced monthly.

Employees at both stores said the stations are fairly popular among music buyers because they can sample music to decide if they really enjoy the sound.

Muzza Chunka sings about food

HAROLD RING
Collegian

The song list looks like a take-out menu, and Muzza Chunka delivers on its new album "Fishy Pants."

Food seems to be important to this band. Song titles like "Dim Sum Brunch," Chicken Lamp," "Feed Me" and "Insects and Condiments" make up the musical buffet offered on "Fishy Pants."

The guitars grind, the drums pound, and the vocalist snarls, somewhat in the fashion of Nirvana around "Bleach." All of it combines to make the kind of noise that will sell records.

Muzza Chunka evens pays homage to Kurt Cobain in the song "Dim Sum Brunch." The song is about how underground rock has been sold out to the music industry. The other songs are the basic society-is-all-screwed variety.

This band is hard. The lyrics say what is on the mind of the band members, and the music is used to drive the point into the thickest skull. The lyrics of "Loaded" are typical of the mood of the album: "We smell deceit/like a disease/what's that to me/RAGE"

On the downside, most of the songs are formula. This band isn't doing anything new.

However, even though this doesn't sound like new stuff, it is done well, and it will not disappoint fans of Pearl Jam, Nirvana and Urge Overkill.

Overall, "Fishy Pants" is a good first effort. The band has what it takes to make it in today's MTV-influenced music world. The album includes some boss cover art of some fish, too. It's nice to see a band concentrate on the visual aspects that might sell records.

If bands like this make it, the way may be opened for some really hard, angry bands like Sick Of It All and Madball. That would make this album worth buying all by itself.

YOU'RE ASKING ME?

by Cassandra Duveaux

■ Letters to Cassandra Duveaux may be submitted in person or by mail to the Kansas State Collegian, c/o Cassandra Duveaux, Kedzie 116, Manhattan, Kan., 66506.

Cassandra reserves the right to edit the content. Unless otherwise specified, all letters will be open for publication. Correspondence designated as "private" or "not for publication" will be kept in the strictest confidence. The advice presented in this column is solely the opinion of the columnist and does not reflect the opinion of the Collegian or K-State.

Dear Cassandra,

I have a problem. I have been married for several years. I came to K-State alone a year ago. My husband was in the Army then.

I had a boyfriend here. He knew I had a husband. He is unmarried, and I knew he had several girlfriends before me.

But we liked each other very much and had a wonderful time when we were together.

Now he has moved to another place and has been away for several months. We still keep in touch with phone calls and e-mail.

My husband joined me recently. The problem is, when I make love to my husband, I just keep thinking it is my boyfriend. Sometimes I almost call out my boyfriend's name. My whole body cries out needing him and not my husband.

Thinking of my boyfriend has lead to a lot of sleepless nights. I have tried to rid him from my mind, but I cannot.

I really feel sorry for my husband. He doesn't know anything about this. This situation has made me very unhappy and really upset. It seems I love both of them. Cassandra, what should I do?

Signed,
Between Two Men

Dear Between Two Men,

I understand your pain and confusion. This is really a difficult situation for you, I can tell.

I think you should talk to your husband. I believe complete honesty is important. You owe it to him to tell him about your boyfriend and your confused feelings.

And then I think you should take some time to figure out what you want — what it is you need to do to be happy. Stay with a friend if possible. Stay with a family member. But get some time to yourself, alone, so you can put things into perspective.

If you want to make this marriage work, it's goodbye to your boyfriend. If you want to explore your feelings for your boyfriend, you shouldn't be married. But you have to make a decision. Straddling the relationship fence is not fair or emotionally healthy to any of those involved.

Above all — do what is right for you.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Try some different cuisine. Chinese food is a good start.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Bowling shirts are a great Christmas present for the folks.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Finals are coming up. Study this weekend to cut down study time during finals week.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Only nine days until "Waynes World 2" comes out. Better stand in line now.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Time to pop on some Barry Manilow, brew some hot chocolate and trim that tree.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): It's time to visit that class you haven't been to since the first week of September.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): You, too, should streak across campus and get your picture on the front page.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Wear a pair of long underwear to class tomorrow — a cold front is coming through.

KSU AIDS Awareness Week

SEXUALLY TRANSMITTED DISEASES

CAUTION

SPONSORED BY KSU COMMUNICABLE DISEASE COMMITTEE

HEPATITIS

CAUSE: Hepatitis B,C, & D.
Viruses transmitted by sex, blood & birth.
PREVALENCE: "B"-300,000 (5% develop chronic liver disease); "C"-150,000 (50% develop chronic liver disease); "D" occurs only in conjunction with hepatitis "B."
SYMPTOMS: None, or fever, nausea, malaise, muscle & joint aches, jaundice and appetite loss.
TEST: Blood test
CURABLE: Not medicine. Vaccine available for Hepatitis B prevention.
COMPLICATIONS: Death, chronic active hepatitis, cirrhosis, liver failure, cancer of liver; if no symptoms,can unknowingly infect others, babies can be infected.

HERPES

CAUSE: Herpes Simplex Virus, (Types 1 & 2)
PREVALENCE: 20% Adults infected, 1/2 million new cases a year, 60% never have symptoms
SYMPTOMS: None, or painful blisters and ulcerations of genital skin.
TEST: Swab culture of infected skin; blood test less helpful
CURABLE: No, but medication available to help. Lifelong infection.
COMPLICATIONS: Recurrence with or without symptoms, so can infect others unknowingly. Babies can be infected. Can infect eyes, mouth, cause encephalitis/ meningitis.

HPV

CAUSE: Human Papilloma Viruses.
PREVALENCE: At least 1/2 million new cases a year. Very common at K.S.U.
SYMPTOMS: None; occasional irritation of genital area. Warty growths in estimated only 30% of those infected; warts on genitals, anus, and throat possible.
TEST: No blood test or culture. Visual examination, "Vinegar test," PAP Smear.
CURABLE: No, probably lifelong infection. Treat lesions but cannot cure the infection.
COMPLICATIONS: Can cause pre-cancer (dysplasia) and cancer of the cervix, and perhaps of penis and vagina. If no lesions to warn can infect others unknowingly. Rarely, babies are infected.

HIV-AIDS

CAUSE: Human Immunodeficiency Virus, type 1 (1 of every 250 infected), type 2 (rare in the U.S. so far).
PREVALENCE: 1-1 1/2 million U.S.A.: 10-15 million worldwide. Estimates 40-50 K-Staters predicted to be HIV-infected .
SYMPTOMS: None; occasional flu-like illness 2-3 weeks after infection. Then nothing for 8-10 years when infections and cancers of AIDS appear.
TEST: Blood test. County health dept. $20 (Confidential), Lafene $28 (Confidential), Community Clinics $40-$45 (Confidential).
Negative results do not guarantee safety.
CURABLE: No.
COMPLICATIONS: Death, numerous infections and cancers. In addition to sex, can be transmitted by blood or birth.

SYPHILIS

CAUSE: Treponema pallidum, a bacteria
PREVALENCE: Increasing since 1986: about 130,000 cases a year.
SYMPTOMS: none early on; 1st stage chancre (sore) that resolves on own; 2nd stage: fever, malaise, lymph node swelling, hepatitis, bone infection, rash (esp. palms & soles) and genital wart-like growths. Late stage: Damage to brain, joints, heart, blood vessels, eyes, virtually any organ.
TEST: Blood test; scraping and darkfield microscopy of chancre.
CURABLE: Yes, if found.
COMPLICATIONS: Paralysis, dementia, brain infection, death. Dubbed "The great Imitator" because it can present itself in so many ways.

NGU/MPC

CAUSE: Numerous: Chlamydia causes 50-60%: 20-25% by ureaplasma and mycoplasma; remainder unknown.
PREVALENCE: Very common at K.S.U. 2-4 million in the U.S.A.
SYMPTOMS: None, or penile discharge, painful urination, vaginal discharge, pelvic pain.
TEST: Always screen for Chlamydia and Gonorrhea; gram stain.
CURABLE: Yes.
COMPLICATIONS: Prostate infection, Epididymis infection, Testicular infection, sterility by scarring sperm or fallopian ducts, pelvic infection.
NGU (men): Non Gonococcal Urethritis
MPC (women): Muco Purulent Ceryicitis

GONORRHEA

CAUSE: Neisseria gonorrhea, a bacterum
PREVALENCE: 1-2 million a year, much less common than Chlamydia
SYMPTOMS: Same as Chlamydia.
TEST: Swab test from penis, cervix, throat, rectum, etc.
CURABLE: Yes, if found.
COMPLICATIONS: Same as Chlamydia. Some bacterial strains have developed resistance to some antibiotics.

CHLAMYDIA

CAUSE: Chlamydia trachomatis, a bacterum
PREVALENCE: #1 STD, over 4 million a year in U.S.A.,
SYMPTOMS: None (Men & Women), or a penile discharge, testicular pain, painful urination, pelvic pain & vaginal bleeding.
TEST: Swab test from penis, cervix, throat, rectum, etc.
CURABLE: Yes, if found.
COMPLICATIONS: Sterility, ectopic pregnancy, testicular & prostate infections, PID (pelvic inflammatory disease) Spontaneous Abortion. Unknowingly give to sexual partner. Babies can be infected.

RISKS

Unavoidable: birth to infected parent.
Avoidable (Behavior choices):
1. MULTIPLE PARTNERS
2. SEX:
   A. Casual or anonymous
   B. Oral, genital and especially anal sex.
   C. Going bare--Condoms aren't 100% but much better than bare.
3. IV DRUG USE and needle sharing.
4. ALCOHOL--drops inhibitions and drops pants.

RISK REDUCERS

1. ABSTINENCE. Just say no!
2. AVOID MULTIPLE PARTNERS.
3. AVOID CASUAL AND ANONYMOUS SEX
4. KNOW YOUR PARTNER'S SEXUAL PAST. "Date and relate before you mate."
5. DON'T DO DRUGS: IV, alcohol or otherwise. They can lower your defenses to sexual and blood exposures.
6. CONDOMS (Coated with Nonoxynol-9). Not 100% safe.
7. THINK AND CHOOSE CAREFULLY with your head, not your hormones.
8. PARTNERS of infected persons must be informed and treated.

RESOURCES

1. YOURSELF-- Be knowledgeable, be careful, be choice-empowered. Check your genitals regularly. Be you man or woman, if you are sexually active, visit your doctor annually. Also "when in doubt, check it out."
2. LAFENE HEALTH CENTER- 532-6544
3. University COUNSELING CENTER 532-6432
4. RILEY COUNTY HEATH DEPARTMENT - 776-4779
5. YOUR FAMILY DOCTOR

Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.

Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.

Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

CATEGORIES

To help you find what you are looking for, the classified ads have been arranged by category and sub-category. All categories are marked by one of the large images, and sub-categories are preceded by a number designation.

Survey: 53% want smoking in Union

CRISTINA JANNEY
Collegian

A smoking survey reported to the Union Governing Board Thursday night showed 53 percent of students, faculty and staff favored a moderate tobacco policy for the Union over the current total ban.

"I think the survey showed more support for a more moderate policy than we ever expected," Richard Coleman, faculty representative to the board, said.

When confronted with specific policy changes, less than a majority could agree on the form a new smoking policy might take.

Forty-three percent of respondents favored the sale of tobacco in the Union.

Forty-one percent favored letting people smoke in small, well-ventilated areas.

An overwhelming majority 92 percent of the respondents were against allowing smoking in most areas.

"I think people's attitude who were surveyed is that smokers have rights, too, but that the rights of non-smokers should also be protected," Coleman said.

The survey showed 75 percent of students, faculty and staff were non-smokers.

Student Senator Trent LeDoux earlier this year submitted a policy to end the ban on sale of tobacco in the Union.

The board voted to postpone a vote on the policy until February.

Support by 81 percent of the survey respondents to let the issue be decided in a referendum may have been a reason for the postponement.

Coleman suggested the board look into a possible referendum on the subject.

LeDoux said he agreed that more discussion of the smoking issue was necessary.

In another report, Jack Sills, director of the Union, said the Union bookstore plans to continue the E-CAP system next semester. An E-CAP account allows students with financial need to charge $250 worth of books and supplies at the bookstore.

The bookstore is compiling a student questionnaire to review the program.

Feedback from students thus far indicated the program has helped students and not taken customers from other businesses, Sills said.

"I believe we have kept students in school with books that would otherwise gone without," Sills said.

Those students that have outstanding fall E-CAP balances will not be allowed to use the program next semester, he said.

In other business, Sills presented a letter from the sanitation committee concerning a board policy that would allow international student groups to serve homemade food at events in the Union.

The sanitation committee has a separate policy that prohibits homemade food from being served on campus.

According to the letter, the UGB policy was discussed at a sanitation committee meeting and a motion made to change the sanitation policy to allow the exception, but the motion died for lack of a second.

"I think we will find some way to accommodate these groups," Beth Trimmer, board president, said.

AIDS hits home for two local men

Student gets AIDS through transfusion; family, town shuns him

LEIGH NEVANS

These stories are the last in a four-part series.

C.J. is like most K-State students. He goes to class in blue jeans and carries his backpack. But there is one difference — C.J. has the HIV virus, which causes AIDS.

"I got it through a blood transfusion in 1979," C.J. said.

After being in a car accident and being put in the hospital, C.J.'s blood was monitored because he is borderline diabetic.

His blood tests kept coming back with strange results. After going back to the hospital a few times, hospital officials discovered that C.J. might have HIV.

He then went through the extensive process of four HIV tests, and in December 1992, C.J. learned he was HIV-positive.

"I had no reason to believe I had HIV or AIDS," he said. "I already knew what AIDS was because I was in the nursing field."

C.J. hadn't practiced any of the risky behaviors that are known to cause AIDS, he said.

"Once I was told of the news, I felt my family needed to know," C.J. said.

C.J. told his brother, a minister, that he was HIV-positive. His brother told a friend, also a minister, and the friend told C.J.'s parents for him.

"I wasn't there," C.J. said. "I left to go on a walk."

When he returned from his walk, his parents would not say anything, he said.

"They didn't want to talk about it," he said. "Because my parents are older, they aren't accepting it."

The community where C.J. is from responded in the same way his family did.

"Nobody wanted to deal with it," C.J. said. "That's typical for a small community. I've been asked to leave."

C.J. has made attempts to get in touch with his family, but his family hasn't responded, he said.

"The family doesn't want me around, because it would be too hard on my father, who has heart trouble," C.J. said.

He also said he did not want to feel responsible for his father's death.

"To have my family turn their backs on me, that was hard," C.J. said. "I haven't spoken to my parents or my brother.

"I'm very angry," he said. "I'm very upset."

When C.J. came to K-State, he found a group who would accept him.

"I established myself with the Methodist church in Manhattan," C.J. said.

They know about his illness, and they don't turn him away, he said.

C.J. said he has called people from his church numerous times late at night to come sit with him.

"My support group is with them at this time," he said. "People don't know what it means to get a hug."

C.J. said he is thankful for people like those at his church, and Kelley Fink, health educator at Lafene Health Center.

"Kelley is very dedicated, beyond just AIDS Awareness Week," he said.

C.J. is experiencing some deterioration of his health because of the disease.

Right now, he is having some memory loss, low energy level and a lot of stress, he said.

He lost nine pounds in two days, and sometimes he cannot get out of bed in the mornings.

"Sometimes, I'm afraid to go to sleep," C.J. said. "I'm afraid I'll die alone, in my sleep.

"I went through a real depressed time," he said. "You try not to think about it. I try to stay as positive about this as I can."

Matt's name has been changed to protect his identity.

Matt has never really talked to a stranger about his disease, and until recently, he knew little about it. Earlier this year, Matt found out he was HIV-positive — he had the virus that causes AIDS.

After a throat infection earlier this year, Matt lost a lot of weight. His doctor told him this is commonly a symptom of AIDS, so he decided to get tested.

While waiting for the results, he was trying to deny what was to come, Matt said.

"I was denying it," he said. "I didn't want to hear it.

"I thought, 'This won't happen to me,'" he said.

Matt said he has never been exposed to HIV and AIDS.

"I'm the first person I know who has AIDS," he said. "I never knew anyone before who had it.

"Something I'm scared of is I don't know what is going to hit me," Matt said.

He joined a support group, but it didn't really help him, he said.

"I met a good friend at therapy, so that was good," Matt said. "My mom is wonderful. She's very supportive.

"I've told all my relatives and friends," he said. "Everyone is OK with it."

Most of Matt's support comes from his mother.

"My mom was the hardest to tell because she is like my best friend," Matt said. "I knew she wouldn't take it well."

Matt experiences mood swings because of his illness.

"One day I'll be mad," Matt said. "One day I'll be depressed because I don't feel well."

He gets help for the high medical expenses that go along with having the disease.

"I went to Social Rehabilitation Services, and I got a really great social worker," he said. "She got me my medical card to cover medical expenses.

"I got a prescription that was $600, and the card paid for it, but I had to pay a small fee," Matt said.

Matt is taking experimental drugs like AZT and DDC, he said.

"When you know you're going to die sooner than anyone else, you're willing to try anything," he said. "I don't do anything different than I did before."

Matt gave some advice to students and others about avoiding risky behavior that is known to cause AIDS.

"What they're saying about safe sex is true," he said.

It is important to use condoms, Matt said. It is also important have a monogamous relationship.

"You go to a bar and go home with somebody," he said. "They shouldn't go home with anybody if they're drunk.

"Alcohol has a lot to do with it," Matt said. "Use good judgment."

Eagle held in contempt of court

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WICHITA — A newspaper and two journalists have been held in contempt of court for refusing to surrender notes and audio tapes from an interview with a woman accused of shooting an abortion doctor.

Sedgwick County District Judge Paul Clark gave the Wichita Eagle, editor Davis "Buzz" Merritt Jr. and reporter Judy Lundstrom Thomas a deadline of 5 p.m. on Dec. 10 to turn over the materials to prosecutors, or face time in jail.

The Eagle said the notes in question came from a two-hour telephone interview between Thomas and Rachelle "Shelley" Shannon, who is charged with attempted first-degree murder in last summer's shooting of Dr. George Tiller, who performs abortions at a Wichita clinic. Tiller suffered minor wounds in both arms.

In a Nov. 2 story based on the interviews, Shannon said she had shot Tiller and said, "I'll always know I did the right thing."

Shannon, of Grants Pass, Ore., has refused to talk to prosecutors. Sedgwick County District Attorney Nola Foulston claims the notes and tapes contain information unavailable in any other way.

Thomas, a former K-State Collegian editor, also interviewed Shannon face to face.

The contempt ruling Wednesday came after testimony by Thomas, who refused again in court to turn over the information. She argued that journalists should not be forced to share unpublished information from interviews.

"If we become the investigative arm of the law, the result is people aren't going to talk to us," she said.

Merritt also refused to release the documents.

"We don't want to be in contempt of court, and we certainly are not contemptuous of the court," Merritt said afterward.

If the newspaper refuses to comply, Clark said, Merritt and Thomas must report to jail that day, and the Wichita Eagle-Beacon Publishing Co. will be fined $1,000 a day until the notes and tapes are surrendered.

The Eagle hasn't decided whether to appeal the contempt finding, Merritt said.

PLASTIC TREES CHALLENGED

TOPEKA, Kan. — Chuck Wright has had it with plastic Christmas trees.

"Wake Up, America! Celebrate Christmas with a real Christmas tree and wreath while helping protect our valuable non-renewable environment," the former Topeka mayor proclaims in a pamphlet he is providing to live tree growers.

His pamphlet, 5,000 of which he has sent out so far, emphasizes four points:

- ◆ Plastic trees and wreaths are made from nonrenewable petroleum.
- ◆ If a plastic tree catches fire, it pollutes the air with toxic fumes.
- ◆ Plastic trees cannot be recycled.
- ◆ Plastic trees are manufactured mostly outside the United States.

Pharmacy expanded to increase efficiency

Lafene Health Center's pharmacy has a new look. This summer, the pharmacy was remodeled to accommodate Lafene's three full-time pharmacists and provide space for additional medicines.

The pharmacy previously had one room with a small back room. This has been expanded to one large room.

Bill Salero, director of the pharmacy, said the old facility was too small and crowded. He said the expansionl helps students receive prescriptions quickly andl relieves congestion in the hallways.

Drug samples prescribed by doctors are now kept in the pharmacy area. Doctors used to retrieve the samples for the patients themselves, Salero said. An over-the-counter area has been available for students since the expansion.

"Working will be more pleasant when everyone is not bumping into each other," he said. Adjustable shelving, new carpet and better lighting are appreciated., Salero said.

"This is the first change in the pharmacy since 1959," Salero said. The remodeling project began after graduation and was done by the first day of fall semester classes.

"I'm happy that it's remodeled and to have the extra space and room," Jeff Dumler, pharmacist at Lafene, said. "The working conditions are better, and it is a lot cheerier and brighter. It gives us the opportunity to serve people better."

Pam Spaulding, Lafene pharmacist, said, "We're not tripping over each other as often. It's a definite improvement, the added space is better and it's a better

Pizza Hut to send pizza to Somalia

WICHITA,(AP) — U.S. soldiers in Somalia will get a slice of life from the States this weekend — a piece of Pizza Hut pizza.

The Wichita-based pizza maker is donating 600 large pepperoni pan pizzas to troops serving in the East African country.

The pizzas were baked and boxed Wednesday at six Philadelphia area Pizza Hut restaurants, gathered in a refrigerated van and hauled overnight to nearby Dover Air Force Base.

On Thursday, the pizzas were packed in dry ice and loaded into the belly of a C-5 Galaxy — the Air Force's largest cargo plane.

Scheduled to begin the 22-hour trip to Somalia tonight, the pizzas will be unloaded there and reheated in field kitchens, a military spokesman said.

Pizza Hut is providing labor and materials — 1,000 pounds of pizza dough, 5,000 ounces of sauce, 500 pounds of cheese, 30,000 slices of pepperoni and 600 boxes for the pizzas; the military is providing transportation, both ground and air.

Bob Eye looks to lead Kansas as governor

TOPEKA (AP) — Bob Eye, former general counsel of the Kansas Department of Health and Environment, today announced his candidacy for governor as an independent.

Eye made the announcement on the second floor of the Statehouse rotunda.

He said four key issues of his campaign will be the abolishment of the property tax, restoration of public safety, adoption of a health-care plan that emphasizes prevention and the development of a renewable-energy economy.

Eye, 42, has been an anti-nuclear activist in the past.

He also said he is opposed to the death penalty and supports a woman's right to an abortion.

Eye attended K-State and was a Collegian columnist.

Huet-Vaughn's medical license not revoked

TOPEKA — Yolanda Huet-Vaughn should be allowed to continue practicing medicine in Kansas, even though she decided not to serve in the Gulf War with her Army Reserve unit, a hearing officer has ruled.

Michael Barbara, a former Shawnee County district judge acting as hearing officer in the case, recommended to the state Board of Healing Arts Wednesday that Huet-Vaughn's license should not be revoked. She was court-martialed for desertion, but a military appeals court subsequently set aside her conviction.

"I am very pleased that this happened," Huet-Vaughn said.

The matter will be taken up by the Board of Healing Arts at its Dec. 10 meeting, but Huet-Vaughn said she does not know what to expect then.

"I guess I don't have any expectations at this point," she said. "I want to stay and practice in Kansas."

Athletes enroll early

TONYA FOSTER
Collegian

For the past five years, varsity athletes have been allowed to enroll first during pre-enrollment.

Veryl Switzer, associate director of athletic of academics, said there are two main reasons why varsity athletes get to enroll early.

Switzer defines varsity sports as football, volleyball, men's and women's basketball, men's and women's golf, men's and women's track and cross country, tennis and baseball.

"Reason one is so the class schedule is compatible with the practice schedule," Switzer said.

Another reason athletes enroll early is to ensure they are enrolled in at least 12 hours.

"We have to get them in a 12-hour block so they can have academic satisfactory. If they don't have 12 hours, they can't be eligible to play," Switzer said.

Don Foster, University registrar, said the policy has been in existence for the past five years.

"The basic reasoning is practice is at 2:30, and athletes are required to have a minimum of 12 hours," Foster said.

"We have arranged enrollment to give them that chance.

"We enroll them on the first day."

Foster said it is impossible for the athletes to close out classes before the rest of the University has a chance to enroll.

"The athletes are pretty much distributed in different colleges as much as the student body," Foster said.

"Further, they are distributed through the classes, freshman through senior.

"We much prefer they need to be exposed to various classes, and being in class with all athletes is not what we are aiming at."

Foster said there is another group that gets to enroll early — the College of Veterinary Medicine.

Students in the College of Veterinary Medicine have set classes for enrollment.

"They have no choice in classes, so we enroll them early," Foster said.

K-State student likes nothing better than clowning around

TERRY SCRUTON
Collegian

For Eric Stonestreet, making people laugh is serious business.

Aside from being a criminal justice major and an actor in the student-run Growing Theatre Company, Stonestreet is a professional clown.

"I call myself a professional because I get paid," Stonestreet said. "But I feel funny about taking money for it."

Stonestreet said he has had a love of clowning and clowns since he was a child growing up in Kansas City, Kan.

"I always had a circus-theme birthday party," he said. "I would look at the clown and sort of identify with him and say, 'I could do that.'"

Stonestreet said he gave his first public performance when he was 9 years old.

"It was 'Dress Your Kid Up As a Clown' day or something at the Wyandotte County Fair," he said. "So, my mom took me down there."

At the fair, Eric got to go up on stage with Wizzo the Clown during Wizzo's performance.

Stonestreet said afterward that everyone said he upstaged Wizzo.

That's nothing new for him. Chad Underwood, who grew up with Stonestreet, said he is constantly entertaining people.

"He'll do anything to make people laugh," Underwood said.

Stonestreet said he started performing at birthday parties when he was 13. After that, he took a break from clowning for several years and didn't get back into it until he was a senior in high school.

Juggling his school work, acting and clowning was something he had to learn how to do.

education," he said. "If there's one thing I've learned, it's how to manage my time."

Stonestreet said he only performs on weekends for birthday parties, grand openings and other events. His act is about 50 minutes long and involves magic tricks and balloon animals.

'Dr. Death' means more than it seems

It looks as if Dr. Jack Kevorkian wants to do a lot more than just assist suicides.

Our humanitarian savior won't settle for helping people die; he also wants to play with them a little in a laboratory before they die.

The Dec. 6 Newsweek reported that in the 1980s, Kevorkian published his ideas about live human experimentation. Included in his list of subjects would be any brain-dead, uncommunicative patients and newborns, infants, children and all aborted or delivered fetuses who are said to face certain death.

Pretty scary stuff coming from a guy who may possibly affect the United States' laws on matters of life and death.

You may be thinking, "It's been more than 10 years — maybe he's changed his mind."

Not on your life.

In his 1991 book, "Prescription Medicine," he again advocated experimenting on live humans to learn more about death. Images of live human experimentation from the days of Hitler come to mind when reading Kevorkian's ideas.

And what does Dr. Jack have to say about the Holocaust? For one, he has said experiments such as studying the time it took for prisoners to freeze to death after being dropped in icy water were "not absolutely negative."

In addition, he also claimed Holocaust sufferers have had a lot of publicity, but didn't quite suffer as much as his Armenian ancestors.

Of course, these things may be different from his views on assisted suicide. But how much of it is simply an extension of his fascination with death?

We have to consider what he has said and done in the past — it will certainly affect his views today.

For example, if Bill Clinton had made racially derogatory comments in the 1980s, would we have elected him president — a position where he has the power to make civil-rights appointments? No, we wouldn't have because those views would prevent him from having an influence in an area he so obviously has no respect for. Kevorkian has never denied these views, nor has he claimed he has changed his mind.

The prospect that assisted suicide is just a death game to him seems frighteningly real.

To follow such a man — for a nation to pattern its laws after what could be a modern-day Hitler — would be fatal to say the least.

PC = Parental Courtesy

Every Sunday when I was growing up, there were two traditions I would partake in.

The first tradition was my family's Sunday dinner. Mom would pull out all the stops and cook a down-home, stick-to-your-ribs meal.

The smells of my mother's hard work would waft through the house and wrap its tempting tendrils around my nose.

The second tradition was mine own private Sunday constitutional.

Each and every Sunday, I would watch movies. Back home in Massachusetts, there were two channels, WLVI and WSBK, that would broadcast movies all day on Sundays.

I would sit in my favorite comfortable chair and let the television absorb me. By today's standards, I would have been called a couch potato.

Dare I say it, I'm a film buff.

This obsessive love of films has stayed with me all these years and has transferred over to becoming a film reviewer for this here paper.

However, because of a certain trend now present when viewing films, I choose not to go to the movies as much as I used to.

The trend I'm talking about is the lack of parental courtesy at the movie theaters.

Here's the scenario: I'm going to see an R-rated film, which has a lot of violence, its share of obscenities, nudity and gratuitous sex. So, as the film progresses, and the violent scene is about to climax, from the back of the theater I hear, "WAAAH!"

Talk about ruining the moment.

What the hell was that? Of course, I know what it is. Everyone in the theater knows what it is. It's a baby.

Some parents nowadays find it necessary to bring their children with them when they go to the movies.

Not only do you have the infants in the audience, but there are also toddlers who must run up and down the aisles and scream "Mommy" at the top of their lungs because they're probably afraid of what they are seeing on the screen.

Hey, the film is rated R, which means 17 and up can view the film. It doesn't mean 17 months and up!

It perplexes me that some people feel the need to subject other movie patrons to an unpleasant interrupted film experience.

Now let's turn the situation around. You're at home, and "Basic Instinct" is on cable. You turn your television on to watch the film, and your 3-year-old child sits down in front of the TV to watch the film. Would you:

A. Take your child into your arms and watch the film together.

B. Change the channel to something less violent, like "Rambo."

C. Turn the TV off and read a story to your child.

KELLY-ANN GERAGHTY
GUEST COLUMNIST

After the Beavis and Butt-Head fiasco, parents need to be more concerned about the type of entertainment they are exposing their children to.

Most of the films I'm talking about are shown after 9 p.m. Shouldn't the little nippers be safely tucked away in their beds at that time of night anyway?

Maybe these parents can't afford a babysitter. But apparently they can afford the $11 it costs for the price of two tickets and the extra cash for popcorn and sodas.

Here's an idea — why don't you ask Grandma and Grandpa to look after the kids for two hours?

Let's also consider the parents who decide to go to the movies and have scraped together the extra moola to hire a babysitter. These couples want to go out on a date without their children.

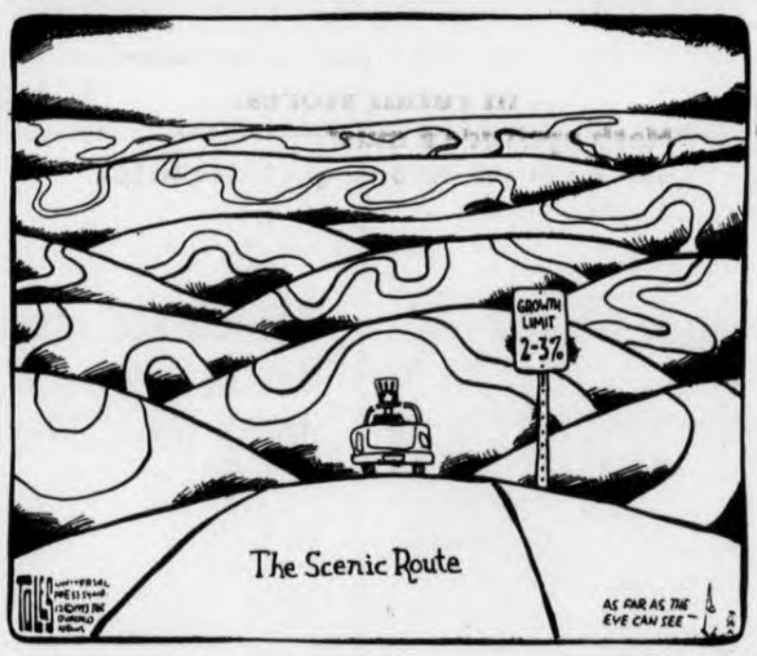
Instead, like the rest of the viewing audience, they are forced to listen to the screams of children who are not their little whippersnappers.

We can't lay the blame at the theater management's feet, because if they turn away movie patrons who bring their children with them, they would take money out of their own pockets.

It would make for bad business practice.

One solution to the problem is to wait for the movies to come out on videotape.

Because movie studios want to make even more money off of first-run films, these movies are transferring to video at a quicker pace.



Parents can see these films at their convenience, and they will only spend $2 or $3 for their viewing pleasure.

With the beginning of the holiday season, all the major movie studios are ushering in their Oscar-contending, blockbuster films before the end of the year.

This means people will be going to the movies in droves during the next six weeks.

Parents, please have the courtesy to think twice about bringing the kiddies to R-rated movies, so we all can enjoy an uninterrupted film experience.

ALL US FEMINISTS ARE MADE FROM THE SAME MOLD ... NOT

Oh, joy. I just love hearing how feminists are all the same.

Well, let me clarify it for everyone. It's absolutely true.

Really. I'm not kidding. It's true, true, true.

I'm a feminist, and I'm just the same as Camille Pagilla, who also is of the feminist persuasion. In fact, I'm also the same as Gloria Steinem, Andrea Dworkin, Naomi Wolf, Virginia Woolf and Susan Faludi.

Really.

All the time, I'm making statements like, "Male sexual attention is the sun in which I bloom. The male body is ground and shelter to me, my lifelong ambition."

Yep. That's me. Just like Naomi.

I also say that any woman who goes anywhere with any man deserves what she gets, just like Camille.

I say that all the time. Ask anyone.

Then I turn around and say that pornography destroys women, and portrays them as sex objects, just like Andrea.

And when I get off a plane after a long book-promotion tour, I'm sure I will feel just like Gloria and be grateful to have a man there to pick me up.

And Katie Roiphe is my heroine. I just adore her. In fact, just the other day I looked at my friend and said so.

"Friend," said I, "Katie Roiphe is absolutely right. We need to stop bitching about being raped. Date rape is just a figment of our imaginations."

"Lola," said my friend, "You are certifiable."

Yep. We're all alike. Just like all conservatives are like Rush Limbaugh and all liberals are like Ted Kennedy. We're all hairy-legged man haters.

Heck, if you read Newsweek or any other nationally known magazine, you'll read about three articles saying how women just need to calm down and "get a grip."

LOLA SHRIMPLIN

Then you'll read maybe one about how there still is the need for a feminist movement.

Nah. There's no need. Since we're all alike, we all realize just how good we have it now.

Heck, I say we all just give it up. I mean, we've won, haven't we? Tailhook was just an aberration. The three attacks on campus were just mistakes. The woman in Wichita who was hung upside down by her co-workers was just upset by a little practical joke. The court system in these great United States isn't in the least bit discriminatory.

I mean, look at it all. A woman isn't asked any questions about whether or not she was wearing underwear, whether she had sex before, how many times, with how many men.

They never ask whether she "wanted it," whether she found the man attractive, whether she ever said no, when she meant yes.

Nope, there's no need for feminism.

There aren't any states that allow men to force their wives to have sex. There have been absolutely no cases where a husband has drug his wife across the room, tied her to the bed, then videotaped the sex act.

Only to be let off because the state in which it happened had no marital rape laws on the books.

Besides, it was just rough sex.

Nope, no need at all.

So, since all feminists are alike, and there are obviously no problems left to fight, I say we all go home, cook up a Bundt cake, make like Donna Reed and relax.

In this new perfect world, we all get paid the same. There are no reasons to fear — we can all walk alone at night and never ever have to lock our doors.

No problems left at all.

READERS WRITE

▶ AIDS/HIV WEEK

Apathy has spread as fast and as far as the AIDS disease itself

Editor,

I almost decided not to write this. Driving home from the "Candlelight Vigil," which I attended on Monday of AIDS Awareness Week, I figured it really didn't make too much difference.

What would it say that hasn't been said? What could I say to make people change? Absolutely nothing.

Because we all know that people don't change unless they want to. People don't change for any reasons but selfish ones.

And so, I suppose that at least for K-State (for I do not feign to speak for everyone), it will take a lot of death, a lot of disease and a lot of suffering — until every student, faculty, staff and administrator on this campus loses a friend, a lover, a mother, a father, a daughter or a son from AIDS.

Then perhaps I will come back in some years and attend another vigil.

This time with hordes and hordes of people who weep, pray, suffer and communicate their loss to teach others about the dreadfulness of the disease we call AIDS.

Perhaps not. Perhaps the apathy will continue. Perhaps the apathy will continue as it has for years and years, since the beginning of the AIDS crisis in this country.

When then it was only "gay disease." Indeed, for those of you who don't know it, AIDS, before it was given the current acronym, was called GRID, Gay Related Immune Deficiency, and it took years and years and protests and arrests before anything was done.

But much more importantly, and much to my fury and anger, it took children and hemophiliacs and straight people around the country to die before anything was done.

It wasn't enough that gays were dying; it wasn't an important enough issue; it didn't really matter. It wasn't enough that they were people; they were homosexuals, and some twisted far-right mentality mentioned that maybe AIDS was God's way of punishing such blasphemy as love between two men or two women.

It took "normal people" dying before this country, our politicians, people or friends did a goddamn thing about AIDS at all.

I didn't realize how true that was until tonight when I realized no one at K-State wanted to inform themselves about AIDS or mourn for those lost because it is still a disease for "fags" and "queers" and that the stigmatization of homosexuality and the deep-rooted hatred and fear commonly called homophobia exists here and is huge.

I would love to hear that is far from the truth, but I don't think so. Sadly, even the gay community of K-State and Manhattan was absent.

Everyone ignores. Everyone is apathetic. There's nothing anyone can do. That is insanity.

And that is why I decided to write this letter. I was so shocked, so overwhelmed, so pissed off by the lack of response at the first event to acknowledge AIDS Awareness Week that there was nothing I could do but write. Or scream — at people who already knew how I felt and were feeling the same things.

Lot of good that does. Bitching to people who have the same bitches.

Our society and the world is crying out to get over itself. To dismiss Fred Phelps and other hatemongers.

To reach out to each other, whether we are gay or straight, black or white, Jewish, Muslim or Christian. Free yourselves. If you have hate, fear or misunderstanding, find out what in the hell you have it for.

Don't sit there and wonder. There are people all around you that are willing to talk.

Life is too short to not write letters.

Big Brothers/Big Sisters basketball blowout is being sponsored by K-State sororities and fraternities.

The Panhellenic, Interfraternity and Black Pan-Hellenic Councils will be sponsoring this all-greek philanthropy. Activities are centered around the K-State vs. Wichita State University basketball game on Jan. 12.

Greek members from all 44 fraternities and sororities will be paired with about 200 young people from Big Brothers/Big Sisters of Manhattan.

There will be a list of children, and each greek house will match five of its members with five children from Big Brothers/Big Sisters. Each child will receive a T-shirt and a basketball ticket. The child will also attend dinner at the fraternity or sorority before the game.

"We wanted to do something to involve the community, and this seemed to be a good idea," said Casey Niemann, Interfraternity council director of academic affairs. "This will give the youth of Manhattan a chance to see what it is like to be a college student for an evening.

Pre-game activities are also planned for the event. There will be several different contests because the age group ranges from 6 to 16 years old. A free-throw contest, slam-dunk contest, three-point shootout and a dribbling contest are some of the events planned. Prizes will be awarded to the winners.

"The events are a collaboration with all greeks, and we hope this will carry on year to year making it an annual event," Stephen Thomas, president of Black Pan-Hellenic, said.

WinterDance presents captivating performances

J.R. PRATHER
Collegian

The Kansas State Repertory Dance Co. performed its WinterDance '93 program to a sell-out crowd in Nichols Theatre Thursday night, entertaining the audience with a diverse package of dance, music and storytelling.

The outstanding features of the WinterDance were the high energy of the dancers and the contributions of the guest artists: Kenya Ajanaku, Kouassi Kouakou and Glenn Grayson.

An eclectic piece, "Touching Down," explored several themes of intimacy and dependence. During the piece, Haley Hoss, senior in theater, never touches the stage but is carried by three male dancers.

It was the first of other experimental pieces, like "Folding Stories," in which the dancers incorporate folding chairs and grotesque facial expressions.

A more serious piece, "On the Ice," dramatized the controversial clubbing of seals, but more light-hearted pieces perpetuated the WinterDance, and the performers seemed free to have fun and express themselves. In fact, they did it in the piece titled "Express Yourself."

The dances were choreographed to a variety of musical styles: rap, rock, classical, jazz and African. One nice surprise in the first act was "Night Street," choreographed by a student, Smruti Patel, graduate student in mathematics. It was a sort of jazzy floor show, with top hats and canes.

During "Trysts & Trespasses," choreographed by Achmed Valk, director of the K-State dance program, the dancers interacted with the live musicians, including Grayson, and a classical string quintet juxtaposed with voodoo drums.

For the finale, master storyteller Ajanaku led audience participation with two call-and-response songs and an African fairy tale. Ajanaku and Kouakou accompanied an ensemble in two African welcome dances, choreographed by Doris Bennett-Glasper. It was just too bad it was time to say goodbye.

Manhattan doesn't get enough African music and dancing, and it's not because we don't enjoy it. Both audience and performers seemed to have a good time clapping and listening to the fascinating rhythm.

Artist shares African culture

ANGELA YOUNG
Collegian

Kenya means "artist," and Ajanaku means "strong-willed person."

Kenya Ajanaku is a performance artist, jeweler, entrepreneur and guest artist of WinterDance '93.

"In East St. Louis, he does work to promote African American music and culture," Achmed Valk, director of the K-State dance program, said.

Ajanaku will perform drumming and storytelling during WinterDance, but he also performed for students at K-State and area elementary schools.

During a presentation to Professor Lawrence Rodgers' African American literature class, Ajanaku told the history of drumming in Africa and its uses.

"The drum was one of the first instruments invented by man and one of the first ways of long-distance communication," Ajanaku said.

Chiefs used the drum calls when they wanted their people to come together for important information, but it wasn't the drum's only use.

"It's how our ancestors passed our history down to us from generation to generation," he said.

African drumming is based on polyrhythms. This is when two different people are playing on different instruments but with similar rhythms, and it comes together to make the perfect rhythm, Ajanaku said.

However, the bass drum provides the foundation for the rhythms.

The drums come from different regions of the African continent and are made from natural materials such as goat skin, bamboo, clay and gourds.

Besides the history of the drums, Ajanaku also told an African folktale from Ghana about why people search for gold.

"I thought that he showed a lot of emotion in what he did and the story he told us," Ta' Lisha Byers, junior in elementary education, said.

Ajanaku said the reception he has received during his classroom presentations from both elementary and college students has been fantastic.

Ajanaku's interest in performing African music began in 1974 when he decided to learn by traveling, based on the teachings of Malcolm X. He and his wife began making bead jewelry for money while they lived in Panama, and this started his work with African jewelry.

The couple returned to the United States after finding few opportunities in Panama. He sold jewelry throughout the southeast, but before he had left for Panama, he had bought a conga drum.

When his family returned to his native St. Louis, he began to study music at the cultural center of dancer Catherine Dunn. He has toured in the United States and also in West Africa.

"I get a thrill out of performing because I know that most of the people watching are seeing this type of music for the first time," Ajanaku said.

Besides performing, he owns a jewelry business in St. Louis, but he considers himself a culture worker.

"My job is to educate people about African culture and history, " he said. "The better we understand one another, the more we respect one another."

K-State prepares for hectic 7 days

DEREK SIMMONS
Collegian

K-State's 85-61 drubbing of Coppin State in last year's season opener initiated a 5-0 start for the season.

The Wildcats will look for equivalent results this season when they play host to the Eagles at 7:30 p.m. Saturday at Bramlage Coliseum.

The Cats, 1-1, earned their first win of the year Wednesday with a 63-54 victory against Texas A&M.

Askia Jones returned to the Cats' lineup and immediately made his presence felt with a game-high 27 points.

Coach Dana Altman said the decision to be a starter in Saturday's contest is entirely up to Jones.

"If he is ready to go, he'll start," Altman said.

"He's waited a long time for this, and he's meant so much to our program for so long. If he feels like he's ready to go, he'll go."

The Cats' game against the Eagles will be one of four games in just seven days — all of which are at Bramlage Coliseum.

Altman said the win against the Aggies was consequential considering the Cats will have limited practicing time for the next week.

"We've got a lot of things to work out. Ski's not going to be able to play 40 minutes to straighten them out on the floor."

DANA ALTMAN
K-STATE COACH

"We needed a win," Altman said. "It wasn't a pretty basketball game, but I'm just glad that they found a way to win.

"We've got a lot of games in the next few days, and we are not going to have a lot of practice time.

"But what practice time we do have, we are going to have to use very well," he said.

Altman said Jones' leadership in Saturday's game will have to rub off on other experienced players, because Jones won't be able to play an entire game. Jones is still trying to make up for conditioning time he lost when he sat out with an injured left knee.

"We've got a lot of things to work out," he said. "Ski's not going to be able to play 40 minutes to straighten them out on the floor.

"We've got to find a couple of guys, our vets, that can help us out. And we have to get a couple of those new guys to where they feel much more comfortable with the purpose of our offense."

The Cats shot a season-high 58 percent from the field, including 65 percent from three-point range, against the Eagles last year. Brian Henson led K-State with 18 points, and Deryl Cunningham led the way in rebounds with 10.

K-State's last meeting with Coppin State was also its first.

The Eagles went on to finish 22-8 overall and 16-0 in the Mid-Eastern Athletic Conference.

The Eagles, 3-1, returned four starters to this season's roster, led by guard Keith Carmichael, who is averaging 18 points and 3.8 rebounds per game. Forward Stephen Stewart adds 17.3 points per contest, and guard Sidney Goodman contributes 16.8 points a game for the Eagles.

Coppin State shot a season-best 58.1 percent from the field and 47.1 percent from three-point range in its win against West Virginia State. The Eagles also received four votes in the Associated Press Top 25 Poll this week.

NFL picks miss chance to keep tradition alive

BOB LEHMAN

A little more than a month ago, the NFL was supposed to award football franchises to two cities that would start play in 1995.

What it did was award one team to heavily favored Charlotte, N.C., and postpone awarding the second until last Tuesday.

When I heard the committee members chose to award the 30th NFL franchise to Jacksonville, Fla., I was stunned. By the time I had my jaw off the floor and back in place, I had realized there was no reason for surprise. After all, it was a decision made by NFL owners. Why expect it to make sense?

Mind you, I am not trying to imply that Jacksonville is some kind of sinkhole in the southeast. It is a slowly expanding area with a great football community.

I would go so far as to say that Jacksonville is football. Area residents support the University of Florida Gators with unbridled enthusiasm. Even the Jacksonville Bulls, of the now-defunct USFL, drew crowds of more than 50,000 for every game.

All of these aspects of Jacksonville's bid are desirable and impressive. There is one thing, however, that is severely lacking.

Tradition.

Many people think that is a good thing. They are new teams, start new traditions. Horse-hockey. If you've got it, use it. St. Louis and Baltimore have established NFL traditions, and they were denied the opportunity to revive it.

It was widely believed that the owners would choose one old city and one new city. This would have been a great way to balance new blood and tradition.

Charlotte was a shoo-in as the new city from the start. It looked like a dead heat between Baltimore and St. Louis to take care of the old. It was so close that it was believed the owners needed this extra month to pick which one.

Jacksonville was not even considered a dark horse. Memphis, Tenn., was fulfilling that role. As a matter of fact, several members of the NFL Expansion Committee reportedly said they could never vote to recommend Jacksonville.

At the last minute, St. Louis had severe ownership instabilities that made its bid not so attractive. That put Baltimore at the forefront.

I was excited. I had been rooting for Baltimore all along. I thought it was a lock.

Baltimore's bid was as good as anyone else's. The city even has the professional football tradition that was lacking in so many other bids. But why them instead of St. Louis if they were so equal on every part of their bid? Baltimore deserves to have a team.

The Colts were stolen from them under the dark of night by a gutless, conniving owner. Office employees woke up and went to work that day just like any other. The only problem being that there was no longer any job for them. They received their final paycheck from a bank in Indianapolis — the Colts' new home.

The Colts Marching Band, made up of volunteers from the Baltimore area, still meets and rehearses in the hopes it will have a team to play for again.

There is even public money ear-marked to build a brand-new, football-only facility next to Oriole Park at Camden Yards.

If these things don't entitle a city to a football franchise, I don't know what does. Baltimore is as big a football city as there is in America, and in their haste to make money, the NFL owners forgot about that.

Sorry, Baltimore. Maybe, after another 20 years of non-expansion, you'll get another shot to make things right.

WOMEN'S BASKETBALL

Cats continue to learn new system, hope for 3rd win

JEREMY CRABTREE
Collegian

The K-State women's basketball team will take the court Saturday against Athletes In Action in an exhibition game scheduled for 5 p.m. at Bramlage Coliseum.

Even though the game is just an exhibition game, Coach Brian Agler said it should be a challenge for the team.

"Athletes In Action should be a really tough team," Agler said. "They lost to Tennessee, who is the No. 1 team in the nation, by only three points."

"Their team is composed of former college players. This also includes former Olympians."

Last season, Athletes In Action finished with a 16-5 record, and the team was led by 6-foot-4 center Lisa Porter, who averaged 14.1 points a game. Porter is back again this season.

The Wildcats are coming off a 75-43 victory against Missouri-Rolla last Monday. In that game, the Cats were led by Shanele Stires, who scored 22 points and had 11 rebounds.

Even with the 28-point victory, Agler said the Cats still have room for improvement.

"We had stretches that we played really good defense," Agler said after the Missouri-Rolla game. "But we still have a long way to go. They gave us problems when they switched to a zone defense, and we will see that a lot the rest of the season."

Even though Agler said the Cats played poor defense at times, they held Missouri-Rolla to just 20-percent shooting in the first half and just 22-percent shooting for the game.

Last Saturday, the Cats' defense held Detroit Mercy to only 19-percent shooting in their first exhibition game.

Guard Shawnda DeCamp said the Cats are still working to improve.

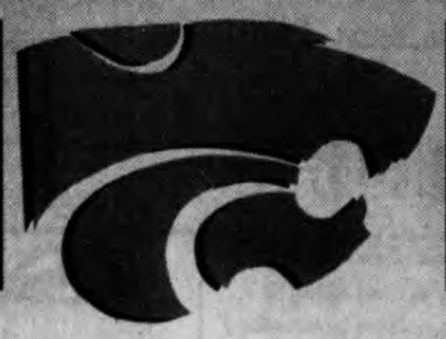
"We're still learning," DeCamp said. "With Coach Agler's new system, it is going to take us some more game experience to get it all down."

The game against Athletes In Action should be a good test, DeCamp said.

"At this point in the season, it's going to be the biggest test of the season," DeCamp said.

"It will show us right where we really are. We can't get scared of them just because they have some former Olympians on the team."

Wing Lynn Holzman agreed with DeCamp's thoughts about the match-up with Athletes In Action.



"We're going to go into the game looking to win," Holzman said. "Coach has installed competition in us, and it is there in everything we do."

WILDCATS COLLECT BIG 8 HONORS

K-State Quarterback Chad May and Linebacker Percell Gaskins were selected to the all-Big Eight Conference team chosen by a poll of conference coaches. This is the sixth year of the poll, and coaches are not allowed to vote for their own players.

Chad May

Percell Gaskins

May: Selected as offensive newcomer of the year after setting a school season passing record with 2,682 yards. His passing total was third best in conference history for a season. Also set Big Eight record for throwing a touchdown pass in 10 consecutive games.

Gaskins: Selected as co-defensive newcomer of the year for players who sat out because of Proposition 42 or transferring. Gaskins had 78 tackles, including four for losses. He shared the award with Nebraska defensive back Tyrone Williams.

INDOOR TRACK

Jumpers backbone of indoor team

WESS HUDELSON
Collegian

The roof at Ahearn Field House may need to be raised before the start of the indoor track season.

It may be the only way to contain the Big Eight conference's top three high jumpers, Percell Gaskins, Itai Margalit and Ed Broxterman.

"Without question, the jumpers are clearly the strength of our team," Coach Cliff Rovelto said.

Last season, all three cleared 7 feet. Gaskins was the Indoor NCAA Champion in the event with leap of 7'5-1/4".

The jump was the eighth-highest among all U.S. high jumpers, not just collegians.

Gaskins will join the squad as soon as his football duties are finished at the Copper Bowl.

"Percell is an outstanding athlete and may contribute in other events besides the high jump," Rovelto said.

Rovelto said Gaskins may be included in sprinting events and relays.

Margalit had the fourth-highest jump among college athletes, but he is not included on the U.S. list because he is a resident of Israel.

Rovelto said the Wildcats are strong in the long jump and the triple jump as well, with community-college transfer Steve Duren leading the way.

Duren jumped 26'1" in the long jump last season while attending Barton County Community College.

Duren has not triple-jumped a significant amount, Rovelto said, but he will work on the event during the season.

K-State's best triple-jumping talent belongs to Dante McGrew, who qualified for the national meet last season.

However, McGrew has been redshirted for the indoor season and will not compete. He will return in the spring for the outdoor season.

Gwen Wentland, as well, will not jump for the women's squad this winter.

She became the first woman in the history of the Big Eight to score points in the high jump, the long jump and the triple jump at the same meet.

"We are redshirting several seniors this year because we are hosting the Big Eight Indoor Championships at Ahearn next season," Rovelto said. "And they wanted to be a part of it."

The indoor season begins for the Cats on Dec. 10 with the KSU Allcomers meet in Ahearn Field House.

Jim and Aurelia Macias: not exactly the Cleavers

As if the John Bobbitt saga isn't enough, we bring you another wacky tale from the wonderful world of marriage.

A woman in Los Angeles, who cut off her sleeping husband's testicles with a pair of five-inch scissors, was recently relieved of her restraining order and will spend the holidays with her family — castrated husband and all.

The story began on Sept. 20, 1992, when James Macias, an alleged abusive and unfaithful husband, came home drunk. He fell asleep, but woke up when he felt a sharp pain in his groin. Sure enough, he looked down, only to find his wife, Aurelia, meticulously sawing away at his, ahem, downstairs.

But perhaps the real twist of the story is in that both Aurelia and her husband recently asked Superior Court Judge Marsha Revel to lift the restraining order. The happy couple, you see, wanted to spend the Thanksgiving and Christmas holidays with their three kids.

Anyone else wondering who carved the turkey?

Football and frontal nudity

Did the "Masked Bandit's" bare-bottomed jaunt thru campus Wednesday morning remind anyone else of the Iowa State football game?

If you'll recall, K-State's game against Iowa State in Ames was delayed when a streaker made his way onto the field.

Why did we bring this up?

Because we here at Weekend thought you might want to know what was rumored to be on the official statistics sheet after the game: The streaker was credited with two sacks.

'Play dead, boy. Good dog!'

Talk about bum luck.

It wasn't enough that poor Rusty, an 8-year-old Australian red heeler, lost half of his left front leg and the most of his left rear leg after running in front of his owner's lawnmower four years ago.

In a second cruel twist of fate, Rusty's owner had just given his 40-pound dog a pile of ice cubes to munch on — a tad too close to the neighbor's truck. When the neighbor backed up, one of Rusty's two good legs was run over.

Rusty suffered three fractures in his right rear leg and now has just a single good leg.

Maybe they should have named him "Stubby."

PHONE TAG

Editor's Note: Yes, this phone call was made more than two weeks ago. But because of a communication error in the upper management of the Collegian (imagine that!), Weekend was omitted from the Nov. 19 paper. We had too darn much fun with Damon, though, to just throw this call away. So here goes ...

Time: 9:12 a.m.
Date: Thursday, Nov. 18.
Place: K-State Union.
Number of rings: 11.
Answerer: Damon Dusin.
Year and major: freshman in economics.

Q. How are you doing today?
A. "Tired."
Q. Too much studying?
A. "Yeah."
Q. Big test coming up?
A. "Yeah."
Q. Any reason you answered the phone? Or were you just trying to shut it up?
A. "Yeah."
Q. You're not a real talkative guy, are you Damon?
A. "It all goes back to being tired."
Q. So are you ready for Thanksgiving?
A. "Yeah." (How did I know that was coming?) "I'm ready to go home."
Q. Where's home?
A. "Washington, Kan. It's about 14 miles south of the Nebraska border."
Q. When you go home, do you double the population?
A. "Practically."
Q. What is the population?
A. "About 1,200." (Is that counting the pregnant women twice?) "It's a pretty boring town. When a cat gets killed in the road, that's excitement."
Q. Wow. That is pretty boring. So what do you do when you go home, that is, other than just say "yeah" a lot?
A. "I sit around the house." (I'm shocked.)
Q. So you don't really have any big plans for Thanksgiving?
A. "I hope there's a party somewhere."
Q. Maybe they'll have a ritualistic squirrel killing on the road.
A. (polite chuckle) "Maybe I can rig up something like that — tie a squirrel down and get a few of us to drive over it a couple hundred times. ... Seriously, there are people there who go around in their cars, and if they see a cat, they will try to hit it."
Q. Hmm. So do do you have like a Persian or a Siamese in the grill of your car?
A. "Not me. Every time I try, I always miss. And I don't see that many cats around here."
Q. But if you did, you'd probably go out of your way to try and clip it?
A. "Oh, probably."
Q. You could get me in a lot of trouble saying stuff like that.
A. "I could always deny it."
Q. Good point.

Editor's Note II: We here at Weekend considered calling ole Damon and asking just how his Thanksgiving went. But then we thought, Hey — do we really want to know?

Students seen carving up Human Body on campus

Human beings are chopped up right under our noses on campus, and nobody is doing anything about it. Of course, it isn't a problem.

It's a class.

The program is part of the course Structure and Function of the Human Body. Students willing to take the extra leap forward into understanding the insides and outs of carcasses can apply for a place on the human body cadaver team.

The cadaver team program, which has been around since 1977, is somewhat unique to K-State, Ronald Gaines, instructor in biology, said.

"The course is a basic sophomore-level study of anatomy and physiology, but it is unusual for students to be able to study cadavers at this level," Gaines said.

Gaines said most professional schools use cadavers, but classes like the one at K-State usually use models and charts of the human body.

However, Gaines said future coaches, sport-trainers, researchers in anatomy or those involved in other health-related professions have no way to get first-hand experience through a model.

As a result, the hands-on experience attracts people to the course.

"It is much more interesting to see how the structures look in the actual body versus the diagrams in the book," Laura Battle, junior in dietetics, said.

Since there are only two cadavers, and since the program only accepts 30 to 35 students each semester, Gains said the course isn't as in-depth as an actual professional course.

Gaines said the students are broken up into three, 10- to 12-person teams that are accompanied by a cadaver instructor and practicum student. As a result, everyone has an opportunity to work on the cadavers. In addition, each team gets a certain amount of time each week for dissection.

Sally Robinson, assistant instructor in biology, said the University receives four cadavers a year, two for each semester, for the students to examine.

Gaines said the program usually keeps one cadaver from the previous semester that has already been dissected so the students can look at the bodies from beginning to end.

The course is politically correct in not discriminating against either sex. Gaines said each semester, the students dissect both a male and a female cadaver.

"We like to use one female and one male to study both reproductive styles," Gaines said.

However, the reproductive system is just a small part of the whole dissection program.

"The students start with the muscles and do quite a thorough job," Gaines said, "The muscles take a month alone."

After this, Gaines said the students move through every other system of the human body: circulatory, respiratory, digestive and so on.

Since the cadavers are usually elderly people between 70 to 80 years of age, sometimes the opportunity arises for the students to see how the person might have died, such as cancer or some other disease.

"We can talk about any specific conditions that occur in the cadaver," Gaines said.

Gaines said the class gives students many opportunities.

"You get to do more than the other students who don't participate in the cadaver team," Alicia Grindstaff, sophomore in pre-health professions program, said.

Grindstaff said she likes the fact they could go in early, dissect and then give a demonstration to the rest of the lab class.

Robinson said the intense substance of the course structures is for those students who are highly interested in getting the hands-on experience.

People who knew they could handle the course were the ones who applied, Grindstaff said.

Grindstaff said she had worked on dead frogs, pigs and cats before. She said she thought of it as something you go into and do for class.

There was only one problem during the whole semester, Grindstaff said. When the students were dissecting the small intestine, a bad enough smell came out that the students had to leave the room for a while and catch their breath.

Grindstaff said she enjoyed all parts of the class, but since she is a pre-health professions major, she was particularly fascinated with the muscular system.

"I got to see the muscles and how they are connected and how they work and move," Grindstaff said. "I feel it will really help me for physical therapy."

Gaines said all students who are in health-related programs and enrolled in the course are given the opportunity to apply for the program.

"There are no set criteria," he said, "We look at GPA, majors, and we make them answer a question on why they want to be on the cadaver team before we decide."

Grindstaff said being able to go in and dissect and not having a clue but getting something accomplished is a fulfilling part of the course.

Professor gives holiday-travel advice

TORI NIEHOFF
Collegian

There are many travel tips to remember when going home for the holidays or traveling to a different country to visit friends.

Linda Richter, K-State professor of political science, is the academic representative to the National Travel and Tourism Advisory Board.

She has traveled through 47 countries and researches tourism, travel and their effects on world politics.

The first bit of advice she offers for travelers is to make multiple copies of their passport and airline ticket.

Richter said she makes photocopies of her passport and tickets and places a copy in every suitcase she takes with her.

"It is easier to get a duplicate passport if you have a copy of your original," she said.

Her second point of advice is to discover whether the country is in a volatile political situation. If the country is, and tourists are still planning to go, the best thing to do is see if the situation occurs throughout the country or just certain areas, Richter said.

All of this information can be found out by contacting the U.S. State Department, which will then give the phone number of the closest U.S. embassy or consulate to contact.

"It is also wise to ask them if there are any areas in the country to avoid," Richter said.

The U.S. State Department can also be contacted to see if the U.S. government has posted any advisories about travel to a certain country.

"But keep in mind that the type of warning or advisory is tempered by our political relationship with those countries," she said. "A few years ago, there were a lot of problems with airport security in Canada due to terrorism.

"But nobody ever heard about it because we weren't about to issue a travel advisory to Canada, particularly when Canada is our most important source of international tourists."

An International Student Identity Card can be purchased through the UPC office. This card provides internationally recognized proof of student status so the student can take advantage of any student discounts that exist in the countries they travel. The ID card is printed in three languages and issued to more than 1 million students in 74 countries each year.

In some countries, student travel organizations have negotiated with hotels, museums and bus companies to provide specific discounts to holders of the International Student Identity Card.

A list of all available student discounts can be obtained.

In the United States, presentation of the ID card can provide discounts at major motel chains, airlines and theaters.

After the Council on International Educational Exchange polled students to find out the cities they most wanted to visit, additional discounts were added in the top 13 U.S. cities.

Railpasses can also be bought in the UPC office. A railpass provides an unlimited number of European rail trips for the travel days indicated on the pass.

A rail travel day is from midnight to midnight. A pass covers many high-speed train supplements and allows the boarding of a train, but it will not guarantee a seat.

"The UPC office deals with K-State-sponsored trips and transportation, like vans, for these trips," Jeff Struve, UPC travel chairman, said. "For overseas travel, we simply sell Student ID Cards and Railpasses."

Santa Paws to offer local pets, owners photo opportunity

KIMBERLY HEFLING
Collegian

Santa Paws is one holiday activity for which you won't have to leave your pet at home.

The event, sponsored by the Humane Society, gives people the opportunity to have their picture taken with a favorite animal and Santa Claus from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. on Saturday.

The cost is $4.50 for each picture, and most of the money goes to the Humane Society.

Last year, about 20 to 25 percent of the participants were college students, Kate Spiller, event coordinator, said.

Spiller, senior in animal science, said most of the animals brought in were dogs and cats, but there were a few exceptions.

"We had a person bring a hamster last year," Spiller said.

In the last three years, Santa Paws has raised about $2,000, said Dr. John Lyons, 1984 K-State graduate and local veterinarian.

Lyons said Santa Paws also takes place in cities such as Chicago with between $5,000 to $7,000 going to the Humane Society in one day.

"The event should be bigger than it is, but the Humane Society would rather spend money on animals than advertising," Lyons said.

Santa Paws will take place at 3262 Kimball Ave.

Manhattan merchants plan holiday festival

KIMBERLY HEFLING

Downtown Manhattan will come alive Sunday with a parade, window displays, open-houses, buggy rides and special shops.

"We wanted the hometown feeling of Christmas," Kathy Johnson, holiday parade chairperson, said.

Beginning at noon, about 20 downtown businesses will be serving refreshments and having old-fashioned open houses, said Scott Morrill, interim director of Manhattan City Lights.

At 3 p.m., the parade, titled "A 1993 Hometown Holiday," will travel down Poyntz Avenue, beginning at the city park and ending on Main Street.

The parade will feature such groups as the Manhattan Barber Shop Quartet, various radio stations and the fire department.

Johnston said any group interested in being in the parade should contact her before 2 p.m. on Sunday.

"We want it to be fun," she said. "Christmas should be fun and spur-of-the-moment type of stuff."

The Retired Senior Volunteer Program will sponsor Santa City, a shop for children age kindergarten through grade six, at the Community Center Building at Fourth and Humboldt streets. The shop opens at noon, and homemade gifts for $7 or less will be sold.

At dusk, the downtown area will become lit by Christmas lights.

Throughout the day, horse and buggy rides will be given with a cash or food donation to the Mayor's Holiday Tree, which goes to the Flint Hills Breadbasket.

Following that Sunday, horse-and-buggy rides will be given on Saturdays from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m., Sundays from 12:30 to 4:30 p.m. and Tuesdays and Thursdays from 4:30 to 6:30 p.m.

The buggy rides will probably start at the Wareham Opera House, but the starting place could vary, Morrill said.

"There's just one, so there may be some wait, but it's usually kind of fun and definitely romantic,"

WILDLIGHT WONDERLAND

KIMBERLY HEFLING
Collegian

In honor of Sunset Zoo's 60th anniversary, the park will be sponsoring WILDlight Wonderland featuring 40,000 feet of lights, live animal shows, a drawing for a zebra-striped Isuzu truck and pictures with Santa.

The event will run for nine nights the first three weekends in December from 5:30 to 8:30 p.m.

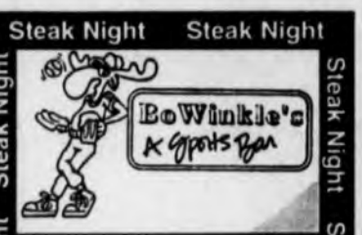
A ZOOtique, sponsored by the Friends of the Zoo, will sell gifts, said Angela Baier, marketing and development director at the Sunset Zoo. Students also can adopt an animal for as low as $10 and as high as $200.

"It's a holiday event — so it's non-denominational," Baier said.

Mrs. Claus' Kitchen will sell items such as hot chocolate and ginger bread, with proceeds going to the zoo.

"It's a great study break and a lot of fun," Baier said.

Regular admission to the event is $1 for children and $2 for adults, but half-price coupons can be picked-up at The Palace, Mr. P's Party Outlet, John's Ice Cream and Video, Clothes or Extra Hanger and the Optimist tree lot.



"We encourage people to bring food for the coupon to be given to the Flinthills Bread Basket," Baier said.

Oh, my gawd — the Flaming Lips!

DAVE OLSON
Collegian

It's been about five years since the Flaming Lips have played in Manhattan. Tonight, however, this band will bring its twisted style of music to the Warehouse.

The Flaming Lips is the type of band that must be seen live to be truly appreciated. At first listen, the Lips' albums are enjoyable, full of simple, amiable (and let us not forget weird) songs. Live, however, this Oklahoma band stomps on the terra.

It seems like it was a lifetime ago when Wayne Coyne and the Lips last came to Mannequins to pound out classics from their first four albums: their self-titled EP, "Hear It Is," "Oh My Gawd" and "Telepathic Surgery."

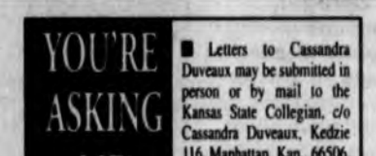
Wayne would torture his guitar throughout super-charged renditions of "Right Now," all the while singing his guts out. Bass player Michael Ivins would lay down a delay-ridden framework for the ethereal, Pink Floyd-inspired "One Million Billionth of a Millisecond on a Sunday Morning." Richard English would beat on his drums like a man possessed, driving Zeppelin-like tunes such as "Unplugged."

Not only was it loud, raunchy and fun, but it was a psychedelic wonderland. The Lips attacked their audience with bubbles, lasers, smoke, disco balls and what must have been 50,000-watt halogen stage lights — a sensory overload that would scare an amateur dope-head straight.

Wayne has been quoted as saying a person does not have to take drugs to enjoy the Lips' music. This is true.

Nonetheless, Wayne once took a time-out at the Big Dog Sound Stage in Wichita to advise a bewildered-looking audience to "Take some acid, you homos!"

Not long after this Wichita show, Richard English left the Lips, and the band recorded three more albums with two different drummers and two different backup guitar players.



The band also stopped visiting this part of the planet for quite some time. Lips fans are split on the issue of these last three albums: "In a Priest Driven Ambulance," Hit to Death in the Future Head" and "Transmissions from the Satellite Heart."

Some love them, but many others find them to be lackluster, uninspired and maybe even a little too silly.

Again, however, a Lips song must be seen performed live to get the most out of it, and tonight is a rare opportunity to do just that.

There will most likely be no assault of acid toys at the Warehouse when the Lips play with opening band Red Red Meat. That's OK. There's more to rock 'n' roll than bubbles and hallucinogens.

Dear Cassandra,

My brother introduced me to a male friend of his about a month or so ago. Since then, we've all gone out together to parties, the 'Ville, etc.

I've gotten to know this man fairly well. He's very attractive and has a personality to match. I think I'm starting to fall for him. I get the feeling that he's interested in me too, but so far, nothing has happened.

One thing that might be a factor is that I am taller than he is. I don't know if he feels intimidated by my height or if he's unsure that I'd go out with someone shorter than me.

I've dated both taller and shorter men, and it really doesn't concern me. The other complication is that he might be leaving at semester.

What should I do? Wait? Ask him out? Ask him if my height bothers him? Buy him some boots and go barefoot myself?

I'm at a loss, Cassandra. I could use your help because I'd really like something to happen here.

Signed,
Legs

Dear Legs,

Girl, go get him!

First and foremost, don't wait. Carpe diem, y'know? Ask him out, especially since he may be leaving soon. The rule that men only ask women out is inane, outdated and otherwise exceptionally silly.

Go get what you want.

Secondly, I understand your concern about your difference in height and this guy's possible problem with it. Talk about it with him. Our society likes the typical couple — taller man, shorter woman. And I think people have a hard time straying from that expectation.

The thought process seems to be for women: If your man is taller/bigger than you, then you as a woman will feel smaller, more petite and thus more feminine. And from a man's perspective, you'll be bigger, stronger and thus more masculine.

Wrong. Cassandra knows firsthand what it's like to have those long, long legs (and torso, too), and I guess I'm telling you what you already know: Being taller than him doesn't require leaving your femininity at the door, and it shouldn't require him to lose his masculinity.

REVIEWS

Tucker still knows how to have fun

Tanya Tucker singing about breaking up, heartache, loving in a lost cause — all that seems like a given. Still, no one else does it better.

Tucker is like the hangover that won't go away. She keeps releasing albums that tap into her 20-odd years in the public eye, warts and all. Yet she keeps finding new ways and turns on the old sounds that keep her fresh.

"Soon" is her first hit off her latest album and probably the best. The aching ballad about loving a married man is a natural for Tucker's husky-throated voice. She takes the other side and pleads to stay together in "We Don't Have to Do This."

Fun and Tucker go together best when she romps on the upbeat "Come on Honey" and "Let the Good Times Roll." But the final song, "A Blue Guitar," about passing the night away in a local bar, sounds like a washed-out version of Brooks and Dunn's "Neon Moon."

The best part about "Soon" is that Tucker provides a stern reminder that even though she's the proud mother of two small children, she's not about to quit having fun.

Soundtrack brings back old country

To their credit, the compilers of "The Beverly Hillbillies" soundtrack don't seem overly concerned with who's hot and who's not. They also have good taste in country oldies from the 1950s and 1960s.

That instantly makes this a more interesting album than the "Common Thread" collection, on which young country acts pay rote tribute to Eagles songs.

It seems soft-rock standards from the 1970s are more intimidating to young country artists than country chart hits that came out when they were less impressionable, and in some cases not born yet.

Highlights on "The Beverly Hillbillies" are Lorrie Morgan's lush treatment of Buck Owens' "Crying Time," and Joe Walsh and Steve Earle teaming for a wonderfully rough version of Carl Perkins' "Honey Don't."

The out-of-fashion Oak Ridge Boys show they still have it in a buoyant remake of Webb Pierce's "I Ain't Never."

Aaron Tippin's best can't compare with Jimmie Dale Gilmore's recent version of "I'm So Lonesome I Could Cry," and Sammy Kershaw's "I'm Movin' On" is no more than competent.

Joe Diffie, Doug Supernaw, Ricky Van Shelton, the Texas Tornados and Dolly Parton all contribute average efforts to nicely chosen songs. The scales are tipped positive by the pairing of original "Ballad of Jed Clampett" singer Jerry Scoggins with banjo hero Béla Fleck.

Imaginative treatment of prime period material makes "The Beverly Hillbillies" a smooth history lesson.

Movie music misses some good tunes

Here we have a proposed soundtrack to high-school ennui, circa the Bicentennial.

The "Dazed and Confused" soundtrack can't win — because anyone who was there can think of something essential that isn't on this collection. A soundtrack of 1970s doper rock without any Led Zeppelin? No Boston? No Aerosmith?

Even if you let that go, this soundtrack is no better than the 20 other "Rock Hits of the 1970s" collections you can buy.

On the plus side, for casual fans, "Dazed and Confused" offers the one essential song you would want to have from several bands.

You don't really need anything from Nazareth except "Love Hurts."

Likewise Kiss and "Rock and Roll All Night." Likewise Rick Derringer and "Rock and Roll, Hoochie Koo." Likewise The Runaways and "Cherry Bomb."

If you care at all for these artists beyond the one song, "Dazed and Confused" is destined for the rarely played section of your CD rack.

Extra minus points to the compilers for putting on Ted Nugent's "Stranglehold." If you can get all the way through Nugent's lengthy, aimless guitar solo — you're probably still smoking that dope.

By Gypsy Rose

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Forgo Christmas shopping in the malls. Let L.L. Bean or J. Crew do all the work for you.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Record Nirvana tracks on your computer and play them to irritate your roommates.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Indulge yourself. Splurge on a 32-ounce soft drink and suck it down in one sitting.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Pet problems abound. Those little buggers have memories, so be afraid. Be very afraid.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Buy an intimidating pet, something with a neat pattern on its scales. Then kill it and have a jacket made.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Don't take abuse from your "friends" if you're feeling testy. Move in for the kill.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Buy an old Ritchie Valens album and lip-sync over the phone to your significant other.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): If the pizza man is rude one more time, call up and complain. Demand satisfaction in a duel for those late breadsticks.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Your libido can't wait anymore. Tattoo the word "available" on your forehead and hit the bars.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): A joke's not funny if it makes your friend turn red and start bawling. Lay off. Your little friend is fragile.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Go for the short date with the funny name. You will find eternal happiness — at least for one night.

Eighteen killed in plane crash

ASSOCIATED PRESS

HIBBING, Minn. — A commuter plane flying through fog and freezing rain slammed into a huge mound of mining waste about a mile short of the airport, killing all 18 aboard.

The weather at the time of the crash was foggy with freezing drizzle, and visibility was limited to about a mile, authorities said.

The Northwest Airlink twin-engine turboprop disappeared from radar screens just before 8 p.m. Wednesday, a Federal Aviation Administration representative said. It crashed moments later on a snowy hill of mining waste near a city park.

Sheriff's deputy Bill Hanegman, riding a snowmobile, found the wreckage about 40 minutes after the plane was reported overdue.

"The plane was demolished," he said. "The fuselage is so compressed nobody could have made it."

It apparently bounced or skidded before coming to rest upside down, broken in three pieces and resting on the side of a 150-foot hill with all but one of the bodies inside.

The crash was the deadliest in the United States since a USAir plane crashed on takeoff in a snowstorm at New York's LaGuardia Airport in March 1992, killing 27.

The bodies of the 16 passengers and two crew members remained at the site early today as local authorities awaited the arrival of investigators from the National Transportation Safety Board. The investigators didn't get to town until late morning because heavy snow forced them to drive instead of fly the 70 miles from Duluth to Hibbing, officials said.

There was no sign of an explosion, but debris was scattered over about 50 yards of snow-blanketed ground, police said.

Eastern European changes discussed

RENEE DENNIS
Collegian

About 30 people attended a panel discussion on the changes taking place in Eastern Europe Thursday afternoon.

The Friends of Europe sponsored the discussion, which featured five panelists. The question was, "What do you think about the changes that have been going on in Yugoslavia?"

Soran Hodjera, a former economist with the International Monetary Fund who owns a consulting business on international political and economic issues, gave the first response.

"These countries must switch from a Communist economy to a market economy which operates on completely different principles," said Hodjera, who flew in from Washington, D.C., to take part in the discussion.

"This is a long-term problem. Communism is not just a dictatorship — it involves an approach to human nature."

John Daly, associate professor of history, agreed with Hodjera.

"Communism is not only a political system — it is an ideology," he said. "They're facing a crisis of spirit as much as economy."

Daly also said he had not thought he would live to see the things that are happening in Eastern Europe today.

Dale Herspring, head of the political science department and 25-year member of the foreign service, said the divisive measures taking place now are similar to those prior to 1945. He said these measures involve religion, history, language, economy and cultural differences.

Karsten Teske, graduate student in agricultural economics from the former East Germany, and Dorota Zabicka, graduate student in microbiology from Poland, were also members of the panel.

"Who would I bet on?" Herspring asked, referring to the country that would best survive the changes in Eastern Europe.

"The GDR (German Democratic Republic), because Western Germany is paying for it.

"Buy your cuckoo-cuckoo clocks now because God pity you if you want to buy something from Germany 10 years from now when they get themselves back on their feet."

European culture featured

RENEE DENNIS
Collegian

The sights, sounds and tastes of Europe were available to students Thursday night.

About 40 people attended European Night at the International Student Center.

"I came because I wanted to learn what's going on in different parts of the world," Sara Osborne, senior in music and French, said.

Osborne brought her guitar, and Yuri Volokitin, international student from Russia, played it as he sang Russian folk songs.

Along with the music came food and dancing.

Brian Herbel, freshman in business, and Kevin Macfee, freshman in marketing, read about the event and said they were interested in learning more about other cultures.

In addition to students, there were also children, friends and instructors present.

"We have some of the best experts and most current information right here in our own back yard," Mike Ahern, instructor in marketing, said.

"It's important that we remember learning is not only classrooms and textbooks. It is through interaction with others," he said.

Elisabeth Winkler, graduate student in speech pathology from Germany, demonstrated traditional dance steps with Richard Armit, undergraduate in engineering from Scotland.

SAFETY

Program targets drunken driving

DANI JOHNSTON
Collegian

Catch the B.U.S.

The Buckle Up Sober program on campus is working to create awareness about drinking and driving.

The program focuses on getting students to buckle up and to decrease the number of people who die in alcohol-related crashes.

"The purpose is to get college students to recognize responsible behaviors when drinking and driving," said Susan Butterfield, public education/youth coordinator for the safety belt education office.

"We are a program of the Kansas Department of Transportation and Highway Safety, and our focus is state-wide," she said. "But this program focuses on college campuses in Kansas."

The program is a collaboration of the buckle-up and driving-sober programs, Roxanne Ayotte, assistant director of alcohol and other drug education service, said.

"We help the safety-belt education office out as far as getting to the students and getting the word out about B.U.S," she said.

"I think we have made a lot of progress at getting out information about the program," Ayotte said.

"We let the students know about alcohol consumption, how much they can drink compared to their body weight."

This semester, there have been 25 DUIs and 11 minor in possessions, which is down from last year, Ayotte said.

"Last year, including fall semester and spring semester, we had a total of 100 DUIs — at this rate we may have only 50 by the end of the year," Ayotte said.

Another problem on campus is marijuana.

"It's our theory that more students are using marijuana on campus," Ayotte said. "I think more students are admitting to using marijuana than they used to.

"When we have marijuana pamphlets out, they go more quickly than any other pamphlet because students have more questions about marijuana. This semester, I have heard more questions about marijuana."

K-State is one of 17 Kansas college and universities that participate in the program. It is sponsored by Boost Alcohol Consciousness Concerning the Health of University Students (BACCHUS) and Greeks Advocating Mature Management of Alcohol (GAMMA).

"Only schools that have BACCHUS and GAMMA participate in the program," Ayotte said.

The B.U.S. program started Sept. 1, and will end Dec. 15.

"We plan on doing it again next year," Butterfield said.

GOVERNMENT

K-State professor named to task force

BRENT DUNGAN
Collegian

K-State is making an impression on the White House and Europe because of the studies of Jim Hague, associate professor of engineering technology.

Hague has been appointed by President Clinton to the Federal Fleet Conversion Task Force. The task force consists of 35 members whose duty it is to "accelerate the national production and market acceptance of alternative fuel vehicles," according to executive order 12844.

The task force is trying to get the federal government to be a leader in the purchase of such vehicles. Hague said the government has its own fleet of vehicles for executive and military use.

Other members of the task force include Gary Mauro, Texas Land Commissioner and chairman of the task force, and Susan Tierney, vice chairman from the Department of Energy.

Hague was selected for the position because of his work on the Department of Energy's Site Operators Users Task Force. There are four universities — K-State, Texas A&M, University of South Florida and York Technical College — the U.S. Navy, and eight utility companies on the task force.

"We are trying to bring electric cars to the market place."

JIM HAGUE
ASSOCIATE PROFESSOR OF ENGINEERING TECHNOLOGY

The Site Operators Users Task Force concentrates on the production of electric vehicles.

"We are trying to bring electric cars to the market place," Hague said. "The purpose of the Site Operator program is to promote clean-air transportation technology."

Progress should be made in the reduction or elimination of emissions, and production of aerodynamic and efficient vehicles that may get up to 100 to 150 miles per gallon, Hague said.

Right now, dealerships only offer one choice of fuel for all the cars on the lot, he said, but the task force is pushing to allow the consumer to have a choice between natural gas, propane, diesel or even electric cars.

Hague said some of his students already drive electric cars to class every day. Electric motors are significantly more efficient than gas motors, given the same amount of energy, and are better for the environment, he said.

The only problem with electric cars is the battery system, he said.

"The batteries don't give people the range they they need or desire," Hague said.

The electric power supply in an electric car is the equivalent of a three-gallon tank in a gasoline-powered car, Hague said.

"We can increase the miles per gallon of the existing tank, or we'll have to increase the fuel capacity of the vehicle," Hague said.

"There is a much stronger chance now than in the history of the transportation industry that we can solve this problem," Hague said. The Department of Energy is already trying K-State's products out, he said.

K-State has developed a meter that will be combined with a special charging system developed by Enstore, a research firm in Austria. The charger can recharge an electric car in 15 minutes.

"K-State is attracting a lot of attention around the world," Hague said.

Martin Leitgeb, technical manager for Enstore, visited K-State Wednesday to talk about the project.

"Kansas State University is the only organization that offers a meter that is ready, available, and with a price that is acceptable," Leitgeb said.

The meter, which is manufactured here in Manhattan, will be put on the market in Austria, Leitgeb said.

The Austrian government wants to have 10 percent of all cars in the city of Cratz to be electric by the year 2000, he said. That equals 10,000 cars. This will create jobs for local people, Hague said.

Hague said K-State President Jon Wefald and Donald Rathbone, dean of engineering, helped tremendously at the national level to allow K-State's participation in the project.
